Peabody's Funeral.

From the Ottawa Courier. The funeral of Mr. George Peabode, the American philanthropist, presents a strange WHITE, spectacle to the philosophical inquirer, Emphatically a man of peace his remains are borne over the waters of the Atlantic in a British ship-of-war, attended by another Man Lost. - Constables Banning and Jor- ship-of-war of the nation to which the deat about three o'clock this morning, densed belonged. The body, on the arrival and a carter's horse and sleigh on King st. of the war vessels at Portland in Maine, is landed amid the booming of cannon, the sound of marshal music, and is carried to the chapel, where it is surrendered from one nationality to another on the shoulders of British seamen, passing through the ranks FROST, FROST. - Buss and Co's, of soldiers in the army of the United States. The whole pomp and circumstance of war, in a much more than ordinary degree, is brought to bear in doing honor to the remains of one who was emphatically a man of peace. George Peabody was simply a merchant, an American merchant in London, England, who had been successful in business. He had no other rank, nor any apparent title to Thelers lecture, to aight, on " Alfred Ten- such honors as were conferred upon his remains. He was not even the richest among alivered before the Quebec Literary and He was neither a conquerer nor a ruler. He sical Society some years ago, and at the had acquired wealth-more wealth than he ms was highly spoken of by the press and needed for himself or his kindred, and, while men of the ancient capital. No ad- living, George Peabody expended fabulous me ot the Post Laurente ought therefore to sums of money on the poor. It was as the poor man's truest friend-one who cared for she education and the bodily comfort of the Peucs Court .- A courage ous and enterpris- | lowliest of the people that George Peabody g fellow named Richard McMultin gained | was honored. It was because he gave away sion to the house of one Mrs. Gosselin, the money, which, prudence, foresight, and York street, last Sunday, under some what accident had enabled him to accumulate, to provide homes for the humble, and build up ad Madama and her danghter to colleges and libraries for the offspring of the sons of toil.—It was because George Peabody sus important portions of their garments. remembered equally the land of his birth and the land in which his years had teer spent and his money acquired -It was because he had a heart and head superior to that gross selfishness which often curses the poseresor of millions and scandalizes the numan name, that George Peabody's remains were peculiarily honored. He gave without being required to give, by any law numan or divine, of his substance for the com fort of many in the present, and of thousands n generations yet to come. He gave money to encourage labor, and to make labor nonorable. His was a true nobility of soul here Hall had, I st night, more of the ten- His is a name greater even than that of sala of a grand concert than popular read- Newton-more eloquest than that of a Chalmers more enjuring than that Macaulay-more wenderful than that of a Brougham-grander than that of a Shakepeare-nobler than that of a Wellingtonnd even more brilliant than majesty itself He gave to the poor. To those who are promised comfort in heaven, Peabody beueathed a legacy on earth. Peabody was Hood with the addition of a purse. Hood sang the song of the shirt.
