"All but the bitterest conservatives shirk the responsibility of throwing out a remedial measure where Ireland is in question. The Fenians only wish they would. . The government, so far, has an advantage in the position. On the other hand, it is mpossible to satisfy the Irish radicals,the people who elected O'Donovan Rossa. and who believe in Mr. G. H. Moore, This class ridicule the government scheme. If they can help it, it shall not pacify the country. If the government fail, my impression is the English, Scotch and Welsh will lose their temper, and then there will be coercion. No really strong and fearless ministry would allow what is passing in Ireland to take place without more serious efforts in the way told when a landlord is shot, or an agent is bludgeoned to a jelly, or a. farm held found or cannot be removed. Cannot in the country of 40,000 men! It is monstrous. A Cromwellian government would find every assassin in a week. A Cromwellian government is impossible now, but if the Irish nation continues this war by murder, after a good measure of land reform, and if it still proclaims itself irre:onciliable, a regime of severity will begin. This, at least, is what the government people tell me, and what the Queen's speech yesterday intimated, I should add, they are sanguino as to success in the peaceful ways."
