He ought to say that the fixing of the line as it had been at first, did not originate with a Franco Canadian ; it did not come from priestly influence; it did not come to them by any way which had been ansinuatedhad received, and they acted accordingly. He had great ple sure in stating the fact. The eastern boundary would remain the same as in the former Bill, at |96 degrees. He would make a few remarks on this p int, and the House would at once see the reason why they did not invite discussion on it. The line was fixed at 96 de-Indians, who were enemies of the Canadian Government, and not very friendly towards the Red River authorities, riwelt to the mote friendly feelings towards the Canahope that at no distant day there would dian Government, or give a pesceful passage to the troops through their country. any treaty being made with them, or without consulting their rights or wishes, they might cut off, or seriously interfere with, communication between the head of Lake Superior and Fort Garry. There was, no doubt, original proposition was that the number great inconvenience resulting from the present system of currency, and he would like of inhabitants should be estimated at 15,-000. It was now based on a supposed population of 17,000. The amount of debt at which they would be allowed to come into the Dominion was calculated on that opulation of 15,000, and so with regard to the subsidy, they commence with a subsidy of 80c per head on the population of 17,-000, which would be held to be the population of the Province until the decennial census of 1881. The Government believed 17,000 was a very liberal estimate of the
