THE APPROACHES TO MANITOBA. Indisputably, there must be speedy means of communication between Fort Garry and Ottawa. A ocuatry without roads is quite valueless to civilisation. Without roads the Highlands of Scotland were only habitabl- by a class of people not a whit more advanced in civilisation than the American Indian. Before General Cope began his military road, somewhere in the vicinity of Inverness, the Mac phersons, the Macdonalds, the Frasers, and the Grants, were not a whit more advanced in the arts and sciences, than the Sioux, the Crees, the Olibbeways, the Iroquois, the Hurons, the Algonquins. They were equally savages and lazy ur tches, decked out in feathers, porcupine quitls, leggings, and lein cloths as many colours as was Joseph's coat. Good roads and intercourse with a Scandinavian or landers an active, proud, ambitious, useful, energetic, cavilined people, out of their own fastnesses, and even, "at home," the highlowlanders tidy "but and ben," than it had done in the time of the Rob Roy half-breed kinsman of Bailie Nicol Jarvin. With only dog conveyanc s, bringing European goods from James' Bay, and a kind of bastury Shetland pony carrying gco's from Canada, at long pation of a class of m'scrable dirty creatures living on carp and pike, boiled with red hot stones, flung into a bag rather than a pot, made of birch back, stuck together, by being filed with cold water, hung upon a triped of sticks after the fashion of the "Gipsies;" Mitzraimitic class of people, who, like the Jows, have kept themselves to themselves, scattered, having escaped the des'ruction of the bulk of Pharaoh's army in the mad freak of crossing the bed of a part of the Red Sea when the tide was out, during the prevalence | Lamarche, the Royds, MM Lenoir, Lesage, of a strong cast wind, for ages to come.
