Old Age. GOODS Fling down the faded blossoms of the Spring, Nor clasp the roses with regretful hand; The joy of Summer is a vanished thing; Let it depart and learn to understand The gladuess of great calm—the Antumn rest,

The peace-of human joys the latest and the Ah! I remember how in early days The primroce and the wild flower grew begide My tangled forest paths, whose devious ways Filled me with joys of mysteries untried,

And terror that was more than half delight. And sense of budding life, and longings infinite. And I remember how, in Life's hot noon, Around my path the lavish roses shed Color and fragrance, and the air of June

Breathed rapture-now those summer days are fled; Days of sweet peril when the serpent lay Lurking at every turn of life's enchanted way. The light of Spring, the summer glow are o'er, And I rejoice in knowing that for me

The woodbine and the roses bloom no more, The tender green is gone from field and tree : Brown barren sprays stand clear against the 10 cents. And leaves full fast, and let the truthful. sunlight through.

For me the hooded herbs of Autumn grow, Square-stemmed and sober: mint and sage, Horehound and balm-such plants as heaters for a second comment and and Bright with pure evening dew, not scipents' glittering slime. And round my path the aromatic air Breathes health and perfume, and the turly Is soft for weary feet, and smooth and fair

With little thornless blossoms that abound

In safe dry places, where the mountain side Lies to the setting sun, and no ill beast can What is there to regret? Why should I mourn To leave the forest and the marsh behind, Or towards the rank, low meadows sadiy turn? Since here another loveliness I find, Safer and not less beautiful-and blest

With glimpses, faint and far, of the long wished And so I drop the roses from my hand, And let the thornpricks heal, and take my Down hill, across a fair and peaceful land Lapt in the golden calm of dying day; Glad that the night is near and glad to know

Dean Stanley on Charles Dickens.

That, rough or smooth the way, I have not far to

On Sunday, June 19, the Dean of Westminster Abbey delivered a sermon on Charles Dickens before an immense congregation. The Dean, who apparently was obliged to sacrifice some portions of his manuscript, took as his text the ver e: in the fifteenth and sixteenth chapters of St. Luke, which embody the parable of the rich man and Lazarus: " He spoke this parable: There was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus, which was laid at his gate full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table." And, moreover, dogs came and lieked his sores. The Dean followed out the idea conveyed in the text elaborately. He closed with the following reference to Mr. Dickens : That is precisely the advocacy of this . divine parable of the gospels and the advocacy of these modern human parables, The advocacy of the neglected and weaker side of life, which, not seeing, we are likely to forget. It is because this susceptibility to things absent is so rare and so difficult to attain that we ought doubly to value those who have the eyes to see, and the ears to hear, and the tongue to speak, and the pen to describe those who are not at hand to demand their own rights, all this Seasons Importations and quite new. to set forth their own wrongs and portray their own sufferings. Such was him who lies yonder; by him that veil AND CHILDREN'S was rent asunder which parts the various classes of society. Through his genius the rich man faring sumptuously every day WHITE MUSLINS (Hair Cord, Checked, was made to feel the presence of Lazarus at his gate. The suffering inmates of the workhouse, the neglected children in the dens and caves of our great cities, the starved and ill-used boys in remote schools, far from the observation of man, felt that a new era of sunshine was pouring on their dark systems; that a new interest was awakened in their forlorn and desolate state. And this was because an unknown friend had pleaded their cause with a voice which ran through the palaces of the great as well as through the cottages of the poor-it was because, as by a magician's wand, those gaunt figures were made to speak for themselves to those who hardly before dreamed of their existence. Nor was it mere compassion which was thus evoked. As the same parable which delincates the miseries of the outcast Lazarus tells us how, underneath that degradation, was nursed a spirit fit for converse with the nobleminded and gentle hearted in the bosom of the Father of the faithful, so the same master-hand which drew the sorrows of I the English poor drew also the picture of the unselfish kindness, courageous patience and tender thoughtfulness that He con-Z many a rough heart and in many a degraded home. When the little work. through the wickedness around him, when b the little orphan girl brings thoughts of and is as a very gift of God to the old man cealed behind many a coarse exterior, in house boy wins his way clear and undefiled heaven into the hearts of all around her whose desolate life she cheers, there is a lesson taught which touches every heart, and which no human being can feel without being made the better for it. It makes that grave seem to those who crowd around it as though it were the very grave of those ittle innocents whom he created for our z companionship, instruction, delight and solace. He labored to tell us all in new, very new words, the old, old story that there is even in the humblest and worst of mankind a soul of goodness and nobleness; a soul worth redeeming, worth reclaiming, worth regenerating; he labored to tell the rich and the educated how this better state was to be found and respected in the most neglected-Lazarus; he laboured to tell the poor no less to respect those better placed than themselves. And if by any such means he who has gone has brought rich and poor together and has made Englishmen feel more as one family, he assuredly will not have lived in vain, nor will his bones have been laid without cause in this resting place of the great ones of the English nation. There is one more thought which this occasion suggests in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus besides the pungent and pithy lessons of social life which it impresses upon his. It refers to the awful solemnity of the other world. "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead." So also on Tuesday there was impressed upon us the solemnity before which the most lively sallies of wit and the most brilliant splendor of genius went faint and pale-the solemnity of each man's individual responsibility in each man's life and death.

$2.00 per gallon, $6.00 per dozen. When on Tuesday last we stood beside that open grave, in the still, deep silence of the summer morning, in the midst of the vast and solitary space, broken only by that small band of fourteen mourners, it was impossible not to feel there was something more sacred, more lofty than DOGAR DOWARD, Organist, Christ any earthly glory, however bright, or than
