Dickens at Home.

Appleton's Journal says: "Mr. Franklin Phillip, a Washington bookseller, who was well acquainted with Dickens, publishes the following extract from a diary which he kept while in England last year - and which gives some details of the home life of the great author :-

" July 25, 1869.-Went to Charing Cross Station at 10.40; met Dickens there, by appointment; accompanied Mr. Dickens, his daughter, sister in law, Miss Stone (sister of Marcus Stone, the artist), J. M. Kent, editor of the Sun, to Higham, by 12 cent .. rail ; gentlemen walked up to Gad's Hillladies sent on in a carriage . On arrival (half-past twelve) commenced with 'cider 9 cents; cup, which had previously been ordered to be ready for us-delicious cooling 14 cents drink--cider, soda-water, sherry, brandy, lemon peel, sugar and ice, flavoured with an herb called burrage, all judiciously mixed. Lunch at one o'clock, completed by a liqueur which Dickens said was ' pe culiar to the house.' From two to half past five we were engaged in a large, open meadow at the back of the house, in the $3.00 healthful and intellectnal employment of playing ' Aunt Sally' and rolling balls on the grass; at half past three, interval for such prices as will clear out the greater por- ! cool brandy and water ; at half-past six o'clock we dined-young Chirles Dickens, and a still younger Charles Dickens (making three generations), having arassorted. rived in the meantime-dinner faultless, wines irreproachable; nine to ten, bil liards; ten to eleven, music in the drawing-room; eleven, 'hot and rebellious liquors,' delightfully compound ed into punches; twelve, to bed. "The house is a charming old mansion, a little modernized ; the lawn exquisitely beautiful and illuminated by thousands of scarlet geraniums; the estate is covered with magnificent old trees, and several 'cedars of Lebanon' L have never seen equalled. In the midst of a small plantaand Grey; tion, across the road opposite the house, approached by a tunnel from the lawn under the turnpike-road, is a French chalct, sent to Dickens as a present in ninetyeight packing cases! Here Mr. Dickens does most of his writing, where he can be perfectly quiet and not disturbed by any body. I need scarcely addthat the house is crowded with fine pictures, original sketches from his books, choice engravings, &c .- in fact, one might be amused for a month in looking over the objects of interest, which are numerous and beautiful. There are magnificent specimens of Newfoundland dogs on the grounds, such animals as Landseer would love to paint. One of them, Bumble, seems to be the favorite with Dickens. They are all named after characters in Dickens work. Dickens at home seems to be perpetually jolly, and enters into the interests of games with all the ardor of a boy. Physically (as well as mentally) he is immensely strong, having ROMAN and Egyptian Searfs and Sows, regained his wonted health and strength. He is an immense walker, and never seems to be fatigued. He breakfasts a eight o'clock; immediately after answers all the letters received that morning, writes until one o'clock, lunches, walks twelve miles (every day), dines at six, and passes the evening entertaining his numerous friends. He told me, when a boy his father frequently took him for a walk in the vicinity of Gad's Hill, and he always had a desire to become, some day, the owner of the house in which he now resides. CURRENT GOSSIP.

found that the coal on board was bituminous, and that it was all in nice lumps, not less than a pound each, with rosin scattered through it, just as one would scatter bran through chopped feed. Une of the hands informed the reporter that the pine knots were nearly all out, but it was a pleasure to discover that there were at least twenty barrels of coal oil still unused. This oil was used with judicious calmness. The following anecdote is told of Dr. Cabarrus, the great homopathic physician, who has just died in Paris :- Mile, Julia Barron was out of sorts and sent for him. "What is the matter?" asked the doctor. "Oh, I hardly know myself," she replied; my spirits are terribly unequal. Some times I am greatly élated, and then I suddenly sink into the deepest melancholy. After a moments reflection, Cabarrus said gravely : "I am afraid there is but one way to cure you." "What is it?" she inquired eagerly. "You must get married," he replied with a mirthful twinkle of the eye, but still keeping a grave face. "Well, c followed by a long-drawn sigh of relief, said Mlle. Barron, after a little hesitation,

"perhaps you are right. Would you marry me?" "Ma chere," replied Carrabus Z blandly; "the doctor prescribes, but never takes his own medicines." A Parisian w.dower, who greatly regretted his wife, had her buried in the ceme-Z tery of Mount Parnasse. He put no monument or stone-only a small garden and a very small inscription marked the spot where his lost 'partner lay. First some nasturtiums were planted over the grave -the deceased was fond of nasturtiums. These were gathered on Sundays, and eaten as a salad. This attempt having been successful, bolder measures were adopted, and some little pink raddishes grew there as if by chance. The official in charge of the cemetery said nothing until last autumn, when he became aware of the presence of - two enormous melons in the little encloy sure. This time police regulations were put in force, and this new form of market gardening was brought to a close by the or bereaved husband being requested to withdraw from the cemetery, which he did, complainly bitterly of the cruelty, and saying that he had so particularly valued the vegetables grown upon the grave, and eaten them with particular satisfaction, because he felt they were offered to him by .
