The correspondent of the Morning Post Arrival and Departure of Mailes writes from Paris: "We are rapidly get FALL ARRANGEMENT. ting reduced to seige diet. The fresh fish after holding out for a much longer time than I should have thought possible, has now followed the example of butter and eggs, and disappeared entirely except in a salted form, of which the mere memory is enough to scrape the roof of one's mouth. Vegetables at present show but little signs of exhaustion, and bread is as much at discretion as ever, which is comforting, for we are told by authority, and in these times the mere assertion of author ity is proof positive, that bread and wine is all that is required to maintain us in health, at any rate in health enough to be fired at by the Prussians. Meantime, di ning at my cheap restaurant, I strongly suspect my flet de bouf to be horse, and I if nothing worse. Probably there are still cacy or every season is still to be found, but few, indeed, are those who can pay their footing there. We are all as poor as church mice. Ready money is a thing that scarce ly exists, and there are many very smirt young men who cannot muster fifty francs to keep them through the siege. The Gov. on his people ?- When he rains, ernment has extended the blessed system of credit by decreeing that nobody need pay their rent when it is due, which is so far a relief to all but those who have rents to receive. One can get trusted,- too, as a rule, at one's restaurant, when once known, but these little reliefs go but a short way after all, and the Parisians have set themselves, as gaily as is their wont, to be poor way a pail of water because it was too hot with grace and to pare and economise in the two months' supply of provisions which Lord Lyons has left behind him in the cellars of the embassy. They can excuse themselves by the reflection that he would be certain to ask them to dinner if he were still here."
