From the Pall Mail Gazstte For dealing with such a crisis American politicians are provided with an expedient of a very regular and commonplace character. It is to dispute with Great Britain, and, by appeals to the deep fund of hatred and jealousy of this country which is always in reserve, to call off attention from the dangerous collateral controversy. The first note of the familiar air has been struck by Mr. Benjamin Butler, whose abilities ought as little to be lost sight of as the scandals of his personal and military lustory; and a letter informs us of the exact variations to which we are to be treated. Mr. Butler shows a sound instinct in postoning the Alabama claims to a new grievance. He has the impudence indeed to say that Great Britain fitted out the ship which became the Confederate cruiser, which is an assertion exactly on a level with the statement that the United States are sending rifles and cartridges to the Goverament of National Defence; the inuchdo in either case being that it was the Government which did the act referred to. But this very audacity is probably intended to cover misgivings as to the Alabama case, which are becoming common among American lawyers; and the other complaint which Mr. Butler urges is much more promising for his purposes. PRICE-3 CENTS

On election day says a Cincinnati paper two brothers named Bigger with two other camping on a small stream in Texas when Richard Bradford, three New Orleans professed gamblers rode into the camp.

These gamblers were on a professional tour from Fort Scott, and were bound for before supper, and accordingly Watrous, Bradford, Joe Bigger and Jackson took a hand. At first Bigger and Jackson won, but luck soon turned, Watrous and Bradpared for the bloody fray. They were divested of their coats and shirts, and their knives were bound to their hands. They were then placed sixty yards apart, with orders to ride at each other with full speed passing on the left side. Both were splendid horsemen. Bigger was mounted on a crean limbed, fiery pony, a little over fourteen hands high, while Watrous rode a large "watch-eyed" vicious roan. AT THE WORD "GO."

the combatants spurred toward each other like the wind, but passed without inflicting any injury. A second and a third joust was run, when Watrous' horse received a slight cut on the flank. On the fourth round Bigger, as he passed Watrous, threw himself on the off side of his pony, so as to expose no portion of his person, and drove his knife deep into the neck of his adversary's steed. Watrous, divining the menouvre, wheeled as the blow struck, and attempted to humstring Bigger's pony, but succeeded only in inflicting a severe wound. This style of fighting was then abandoned, and both men and horses appeared to become infuriated at the sight of blood. As they neared each other the fifth time, Bigger suddenly struck Watrous with his left tist in the face, at the same moment cutting a fearful gash in his thigh; but before he could get away Watrous succeeded in driving his knife into Bigger's shoulder. The combatants and horses were becoming weak from loss of blood, when Watrous determined, if possible to end the comb t by riding down his adversary, which he thought the superior weight of his borse would enable him to do. Ac cordingly, on the sixth round he made di rectly upon Bigger's pony, and Bigger, in attempting to avoid the collision, was severely cut in the arms and face. The pony. however was game, and, although very lame, seized the roan by the chee.". lacer ating it in a fearful manner.

AT THE SEVENTH ENCOUNTER the horses came together with a fearfit shock, the pony being thrown, falling upl on his rider, but both immediately regain ed themselves. Watrous's horse was fast bleeding to death from the stab in the

in his stirrups and to throw himself upon Bigger, but neither horse could stand the encounter, and both fell. Bigger was streaming with gore from the cuts in the face, back, and arms, but was able to extricate himself, and rushed upon Watrous, wounds in his thigh. Bigger threw him self upon Watrous with the fury of a fiend, and almost in a moment his knife had reached the unfortunate gambler's heart, and Bradford, seeing the fate of his friend, raised his pistol, fired, and Bigger tell dead across the corpse of Watrous.

A free fight at once ensued, Charley Bigger, Norton, and Jackson firing upon Bradford and Allison. Bradford was killed in the melee, and Charley Bigger and Jackson severally wounded. The wounded were taken to a cabin about half a mile frem the battle field, and their wounds dressed by Dr. Lawrence, who prouounces them in a fair way of recovery.
