The Public and the Corporation

Yesterday the sidewalks were in a shameful state, and a stranger travelling through any street of the city must have been impressed with the utter disregard shown by the Corporation for the comfort of the public. During the summer the sidewalks can scarcely be travelled, owing to their delapidated and dangerous condition, and in the fall, winter and spring, they are so totally neglected that people generally prefer to risk their lives by walking in middle of the road rather than be obliged to wade through water and slush or climb ing over barricades of snow. They (the Corporation) prefer to squander the public money in paying off Maingy claims than to put the funds to the use for which they are intended, and for the proper outlay of which they should be held accountable. They have been appointed to represent the citizens of Ottawa, but only on the condition that they should have at heart the welfare of the city. By their position they are given the power to raise money from the people and by the way they are not neglectful of this part of their duty. But if through the neglect of their duty otherwise a person break his leg or receive other injury, and then obtain a verdict for $300 damages against the Corporation, are the citizens going to allow this sum to be paid out of their pockets? Such a proceeding would to say the least be unjust, and the body that would sell poor peoples effects on the public market to obtain money to be thus squandered must indeed have a degree of brass in its face beyond the conception of common mortals. During the last year the interests of the if not opposed by the Corporation and the citizens have probably only been prevented giving vent to the indignation which they felt at the conduct of their representatives by the oft repeated promises of that venerable body. Something like the " dog in the manger," they would or selves and with persistent obstinacy they The Prussian entrenched camp at Laon | threw every obstacle possible in the way of enterprising persons who would endeavour to place the capital of the Dominion in a better position.
