RE-VACCINATION

We would call attention to the following extract from Sir Thomas Watson's recently published edition of his celebrated "Principles and Practice of Physic" as bearing upon a matter of great importance at the present time.

In relation to the modified or post-vaccinal disease, several questions of the highest practical moment and interest have arisen, which, by slow degrees, and under careful and multiplied observation, may now be said to have found their solution.

"The first is, whether the protecting influence of cow-pox upon the human frame diminishes by lapse of time, and at length wears out, so that simple evidence to show that, sometimes, at least it does. Certainly in many, though not in all, of those who have gone through the vaccine disease, vaccination at a distant period produces in a greater or less degree, its primary effects. A friend of mine, who was vaccinated in 1779, has a son who was vaccinated at the age of three weeks, and re-vaccinated at the age of five years afterwards. The boy was affected by the renewal of the operation; the father not at all."

"I may well be doubted whether all those who are susceptible of some impression from a second vaccination would become infected with small pox under ordinary exposure to its contagion. The many would contract the disease, and that all of them would be endangered by such exposure, is too certain."

"And a second question immediately presents itself; namely, whether the position of the operation of engraving the cowpox, renews or adds to its security against small pox. Happily, this question may also be answered in the affirmative; and answered by statistics of the vaccinated population. In his able and most conclusive digest of the whole subject, published by the General Board of Health, Mr. Simon shows that during the five years 1833-7, though small pox had been sixteen times imported into different regiments of the army of Wurtemberg, there had been among the 14,384 re-vaccinated soldiers, not a single case of only modified small pox. Still more satisfactory evidence is that of the Prussian army. In Prussia, [as in Wurtemberg] the practice of vaccination was not discontinued.
