It was an old walled town, enclosed on the land spie, and open to the river, the houses going sheer down to the water's edge, with flights of slimy steps worn smooth by the wash of the current, and overhanging The steamers of this line are intended to eaves, and little built-out rooms with penthouse roofs, supported from below by jutting piles black with age, and tapestried with water weeds. At almost every other house (to judge by the rows of tarnished P rfumed, for Tollet and Disinfecting watches hanging in the dingy parlour windows), there lived a watchmaker; and presently I came to a fountain, a regular Swiss fountain, spouring water from four ornamental pipes, and surmounted by the Ordinary, used in washing Linen, Blanusual armed knight in old grey stone.

Before me rose a lofty, picturesque old gate tower, with a tiled roof, and a little window over the archway, and there was a peep of green grass and golden sunshine beyond. The town walls (sixty or seventy feet in height, and curiously roofed, with a sort of projecting shed on the inner side) curved away to right and left, unchanged since the Middle Ages A rude wain, liden with carer, and drawn by mild eyed, cream-coloured oxen, stood close by in the shade.

I passed out through the gloom of the archway into the sunny space beyond. The most out-ide the walls was bridged over and filled in-a green ravine of grasses and wild flowers. A stork had built its nest on the roof of the gate tower. The cicalas shrilled in the grass.
