During her absence they amused themselves in dressing and arranging a little altar in one of the rooms, little thinking that their innocent doings would end in the destruction of the house. Having placed some candles on the little altar they lighted them, and left the room for a moment to obtain some article to further ornament their work. Un returning the alter was in flames. In their childish confusion they knew not what to do, and before they gave the alarm the fire had gained considerable headway. The engines were early on the ground, but seemed to be frozen up or some way out of order. It was some minutes, however, before they threw water, but when they did get going they did good work, and rapidly extinguished the flames which had, however, mide much havor in two buildings. The one n which the fire originated suffered se verely, and the adjoining house occupied by a man named Bretotally burned. There is a Bowling Atley attached to the latter building. Both
