THE AMERICAN CLAIMS.

DEBATE IN THE IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

In the debate in the Imperial House Commons upon the address to the Throne of course the Treaty of Washington an the unexpected nature of the American claims was one leading topic. Mr. Disraeli after expressing feelings of the utmost friendship for the United States said, when the American civil war broke out many members of that House would have rejoiced if the South had achieved its independence; but taking the House as a whole that feeling had not been strong enough to give rise to a single party fight. He agreed with the late, and the present Earl Derby in believ ng that the recognition of the South would not have prevented the final result, while it would have he occupied a place of responsibility. acting on these views he and his colleagues agreed to the Treaty negotiated with Mr. Reverdy Johnson, against which it had' been alleged that it would let in indirect Parts, 22nd -The Minister of Foreign and constructive damages.
