----A STRANGE CASE.

A case is now before the courts which threatens to throw the Tichborne trial into the shade, the claimant being on this occasion of the other sex, and of very wide-spread celebrity. Herein we have Yesterday was the second day of the a romance with no less a heroine than the smith Maid." "At the time, when our story opens," Mr. Malcolm Gill, of Gar-rand County, Kentucky, owned a mare that he called "Joet." Seven years ago, a stable in Nicholasville, where she was kept, was destroyed by fire, and a large number of horses perished. "Joet" was supposed to have been among the number, and when fragments of equine anatomy were taken from the debris and identified as her remains, the bereaved owner is said to have selzed the shoes of his pet and kissed them rapturously. Recently, however, his trainer attended one of the trots between "Lucy" and "Goldsmith Maid," and was convinced by the evidence of his own eyes that the latter and "Joet' were one and the same mare. This discovery he repeated to Mr. Gill, who is about to bring legal proceedings in the New York courts for the recovery of his mare. His theory is that "Joet" was stolen from his stable, which was then set on fire to conceal the crime. It is said yards yards yards E that Gill can not only prove the resemb. While serving a term in prison 2.... 4 for these robberies Nichols became acquainted with Lester, who was serving a term for forgery, and when the two were discharged they concluded to unite their interests and try their fortune together. By advertising they got hold of a young man who had some money, took him down the river Paramatta, and murdered him, having first drugged him with laudanum. Encouraged by their success in this instance, a few days afterward they captured and murdered another victim, and might have proceeded with their work indefinitely if their last crime had not been discovered. The facts in both of these cases were brought out on the trial of the culprits, who were convected and promptly nanged in Sydney, the city which they had made the centre of their operations.
