The Roman correspondent of the Journal de Bruxelles represents the relations between France and Italy as much more cordisl than has been generally supposed. King Victor Emmanuel (he says) has l never ceased to detest the Germans-an ditions of the House of Savoy. On the other hand, he has always had and has still strong French sympathies. If he re mained a spect tor of the struggle of 1870 between France and Germany, and perjured himself (for he was bound to Napoleon III. by a treaty of alliance), it the one hand, Prince Bismarck permitted him to enter Rome; on the other hand, he threatened him with the Republic or the his trip to Scotland. restoration of the Princes. Now, however, that he has got what he wished, he anxious to escape from Prussian influence and to be reconciled with France, whose military system is the bugbear of the future. The King's advisers do not share all his views, but desires to follow a waiting policy, so as not to offend neither until forced to choose definitely between the two. In regard to the question of the mines on the Franco Italian frontier, the King expressed this confidence that M. l'niers would give satisfaction to the susceptibilities of Italian opinion, all the more as in the revision of the treaty of gale of last night-a strong south windhaving had an "unlicensed grog shop" on commerce Italy could without sacrificing the old schooner Marco Polo was jammed Rideau Hall Grounds during the days of the principle of these treaties, offer France and pounded against the dock of the Robsuch facilities in matters of detail as would | ertson Brothers to such an extent that she almost suffice for the plans of the chief of filled with water and sunk. Five of the finest pictures in the museum, the "Andromeda" of Reubens, "Mary Magdalen" of Gerard Dow, two gems; a Cornelius de Harlem, a Verkolje, and another not specified, were found pierced with cuts from a knife. The singular feature of the affair is that the mutilations were accomplished successive days, and each morning a fresh picture was found damaged. The investigations that were instituted developed no clue, and the authorities have had to content themselves with patching up the canvasses as best they
