"The beautiful snow" has been falling in daily instalments until the sleighing has become very good on the country roads, and quite passable on the streets of the city. A "boy in blue" has been going round in certain quarters of the city, if not over the whole of it, warning householders to keep the sidewalks opposite their holdings free from it, or rather to clean it of after it falls. This system may be very good, and possibly had its origin in a most laudable desire to keep the sidewalks in a trians. It is, at all events, in accordance comfort and good provisions, &c., &c.with the city By-law to that effect.

But is there not an immense blunder at the bottom of all this legislation against on good terms with the stewardess, which the " beautiful snow?" What satisfaction | can be very easily done with a few shiners, is there in having to walk over the glaring, glittering ice instead of the snow? I left morning on the sunnyside of the street But when we have the further infliction houses and high banks of snow in front of the vacant lots, or in front of the houses of those who set the city by-law at defiance, then the unfortunate pedestrian is placed at a great disadvantage. Why no mode of getting in or out but should this inequality be permitted? The sidewalks should be kept in a condition fit to travel on with safety; and we think that a good bed of snow would much improve many of the sidewalks of the city.

But why should private individuals be compelled to keep the public thorough. women at the opposite; no partition-not fares in repair during winter any more even a canvass screen, which might be put than in the summer time?
