The Municipal contest fn some Western cities is being waged with a bitterness-at least through the press, from which the contest in Ottawa is happily exempt. There, politics, religion and personal character are discussed, if not with discretion, at least with the utmost ardour, and Stanley Street compliments are showered about with no unsparing hand. After the elections are over, however, the bellicose tone of the contending parties will be moder ated. The Untario capital threatens political, rather than a municipal contest, in which course we think both parties wrong. But if one party puts forward w political ticket the other in self-defence is bound to follow the same course. In the asse of Toronto each party says to the other "You began it!" Both are in apparantly, however, and they must now ight it through.

Under the heading " Encouragement of Crime," the Montreal Herald makes somremarks equally applicable to other places as to atontreal. It is vain to pray " lead us not into temptation," if we at the same time pursue a systematic course of tempting others. The following is the Heraid's article, which we copy in full for the benefit of the civic authorities of Ottawa :-" A few days ago we gave an account of the conviction of three lads for a sames thefts. Their names were Parmentier. Hausselman and Piche, and they pleaded guilty in all to seven different thefts of articles exposed at shop doors, to the total value of about ninety-eight dollars. November last to the 16th December inthe three young thieves above named, session of property of a value that would amount to $1,200 per annum, supposing that they were equally successful which they followed. It is probable, in deed, that many unconsidered trifles may have been overlooked by Messrs, Purmentier & Co., in enumerating their wholesale depredations. The goods were stolen from tailors and traders who are in the habit of exposing at their shop doors large quantities of the articles in which they deal, and apparently with no presautions to prevent their being appropriated by any passer-by The result may easily be concaived. The thieves, as a matter of course. are not slow in helping themselves to the good things thus thrown in their way, for they have a keen scent for such trodsends. Nor is this the worst of it. "In an address before the Engine Builders Convention in Cincinnati, on the 18th inst , General Leggett, Commissioner of Fatents, suggested among other matters bearing on the welfare of the working classes the following: 'Would it not tend to add to the savings of many laborers to transfer pay day from Saturday to Monday? Saturday nights and Sundays after pay days have ruined many men, and brought untold misery upon their families. Again, when a laborer has established a character for skill and integrity, would it not be well to provide him with a good certificate to that effect, so that, go where he will, it may constitute a part of his stock in trade to secure him work at remunerative wages, wherever his kind of work is needed?

Monday pay days are so destrable every account, that it is to be hoped the change will soon be made. Not to speak of the advantages to the workmen themselves, their wives and families, it is a consideration worth millions annually to. the productive power of the country, that the laborer should come to his Monday's work, fresh, hopeful and sober, instead of half dazed, half sick and wholl? remorseul. the latter being in fact the prevalent eeling as witness the popular saying blue Monday.' Respecting the certificate of good conduct, General Legget but advo cates, though he does not seem to know it, the ancient French custom or law o livres, by which every workman carried a little book, with his record duly set forth therein - so many years satisfactorily in such and such a man's employment, dismissed from some other's service for this r that fault, and so on. The French workmen have revolted latterly at the livres, foolishly deeming it a badge of servitude, but the idea is nevertheless a good one; and the more faithful and skilul a man is under the system, the steadier and more remunerative his employment None but the undeserving need fear to present their record."
