The tax on personal estate and income has been condemned in many quarters. If we mistake not, even the Globe has given its assent to all local assessments being borne by real estate; and it has argued very fairly that on this system the law is, that the goods and chattels of the seized by a corporation and the poor tenant left without bedstead or cooking stove, and without the necessary funds to fee a lawyer to prosecute his landlord in order to recover his own.

To put all local taxes on real estate, and not paid, is a simple process, to which we should not object. But to hold personal distinction as to the responsibility of real absolute loss will probably not be great. variently remitted, we should be glad, mere equitable than it is at present.
