REFORM MEETING AT KINGSTON

Address of Hon. R. J. Cartwright.

On Monday evening a tremendous meeting was held in the Kingston City Hall, at which the following telling address was delivered by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Cartwright said he did not intend to speak as a member of the Government, but as a citizen of Kingston, and simply to take Sir John's criticisms of Friday night last, when he had addressed the electors, and to advert to the policy of the Government. He prefaced this work by eloquent remarks on the position of the electors in this contest. They would, he was sure, not be wanting in the courage which the issue required of them. (Applause.)

TWENTY YEARS OF GOOD GOVERNMENT.

He then, taking up Sir John's remarks in his late speech at Ottawa, in claiming credit for the benefits of 20 years' good government, asked could it be that, as Sir John avowed, all Canada's prosperity was due to him—her growth from a series of disjointed Provinces, to one grand powerful whole, her comercial prosperity, with her ships on every sea, her bountiful harvests, her sunshine and her copious rains? (Ironical cheers). Could this be? And if it were so, then Sir John was entitled to be held to account for all of the country's disasters. The past 20 years had not been one reign of prosperity; in the early portion there was a wide exception. From 1857 to 1863 the country had been crippled, and her pleasing advance dated from 1869. There was such a thing as

CLAIMING TOO MUCH CREDIT.

Possibly 3,400,000 of energetic, careful people had something to do with the inauguration of prosperous times. What was the country's support, if not the strength of the men of trade and enterprise, and the settlers of the soil—not the policy of a Government, but the energy of the people. The general weal did not depend on the single virtues of any man. (Cheers) Sir John on the same occasion took credit unto himself for the introduction of wholesome laws, but if they were wholesome it was not due to Sir John to claim the credit of more than passing them (a credit in itself, of course,) since not one of ten, and perhaps only one in twenty, could escape the charge of being an excerpt from the English statute book. His claim for originality was not striking. But he made a still wider claim, a proud one were it but founded, that he had

PURIFIED THE MORALS OF THE COUNTRY!

The man who had appeared before a tribunal of investigation, and was proven to have accepted a bribe of $400,000, partly declared by his own testimony, was scarcely entitled to make such a distinguished boast. (Cheers) Then his greatest claim was his skill in framing the Union and the code of Confederation, and it might indeed be a powerful one had he been a steady supporter of that policy. But when it was first introduced it was not Sir John, but those whom he afterwards joined, who supported it. He went so far as to contend that it would not suit the Province of Canada, or cure its ills. But when the last dead crisis came, and nothing could save him, Sir John, the patriotic, took the scheme up heartily. He had boasted also of an overflowing treasury, and had spoken of the danger it was now in under
