Spain and the Pretenders.

The London Times reprints from the tendered him by the President in place of Paris Journal des Debats a statement apparently based upon authority to the effect that the German Cabinet is now considering the advisability of permitting Prince Frederick Charles, the famous eader of a German army, to accept the throne of Spain. According to this narrative Prince Bismarck has become "unessy at the rivalry and not very friendly feelings which have long existed between the Prince Imperial and his cousin," and has accordingly suggested to Frederick Charles that he could take the Spanish Grown and found an "Iberian empire," with Portugal as a component part. Frederick Charles, according to the Times, is no "carpet knight," and not "to be bun-dled out of Spain" like Amadeus.
