A First-Class Emigrant Agent.

(From the Port Hope Guide.)

Many of our readers will remember the first visit of the Rev. J. R. McCreary, of Coothill, Ireland, to this town, about a year ago when he preached in the Presbyterian churches as he passed through Ontario, collecting money to build a church in the place where he is now preaching. On his return to his own country he finds American agents and interested landlords assailing Mr. Foy, the Emigrant Agent, and reflecting on Canada as a country to which to emigrate. The reverend gentleman's sense of fair play and justice would not permit these attacks to be made, to the injury of a people whom he found to be industrious, hospitable, liberal, and prosperous, and the consequence was, several very able letters to the Northern Whig, Belfast, in which he defends Canada against the false assertions and unfounded reports against this country, emanating as he says, from anonymous and irresponsible correspondents.

We give below one of these letters, written in a free, truthful, and fearless manner, striking at the root of the causes of the state of the Irish small farmer, and exposing the interests that are at work to prevent emigration to a country where honest, sober, industrious men can become independent and untrammelled by landlord influence, or the fear of the power of wealth to crush or intimidate. Such letters are calculated to do more for the cause of emigration to Ontario than months of lectures by men unknown to the people, and against whom they are prejudiced by the false reports of parties interested.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NORTHERN WHIG.

SIR,—The fact to which I gave special prominence in my last letter was the independence that is soon attained by farmers who emigrate to Canada, in illustration of which I quoted the cases of two men—one Scotch and the other Scotch-Irish—who formerly belonged to the class of "small farmers." Before proceeding, allow me to add that the districts in which those men reside (about 200 miles distant from each other) are occupied almost exclusively by emigrants from the Highlands of Scotland and the Province of Ulster. I visited many of them in their own houses, and met many more at church, market, public meetings, and social gatherings; and yet I can scarcely recall a single instance in which any thing approaching an expression of dissatisfaction was uttered. On the contrary, all appeared to be prosperous, happy and contented, quite in raptures with their adopted country (although still attached to the old sod"), and greatly amazed that so many of their struggling friends on this side of the Atlantic are so blind to their own comfort as to prefer poverty at home to plenty in Canada. I freely acknowledge that there are some men in the Dominion who have not improved their circumstances by emigration. Notwithstanding all the advantages afforded by a new, fertile, and well-governed country, they are not one whit more comfortably situated than they were in days of small farms, high rents, bad houses, and bad diet. But whilst admitting this is true of a few steady and industrious settlers, whose lack of prosperity, instead of being charged against the country in which they live, should simply be pronounced unaccountable. I unhesitatingly affirm that it is chiefly applicable to men of a sluggish nature, and thriftless manner, who are always getting behind, no matter how favourable the circumstances in which their lot is cast. And then, in order to palliate their own indolence or prodigality, they send whining letters across the Atlantic in which they pour forth pitiful complaints about the death-like loneliness of bush life, the indescribable toils and pains of chopping wood, the intolerable severity of the heat in summer, and the cold in winter, &c. I respectfully caution your readers not to be so indiscreet as to form their opinions of Canada from the dismal growls of such malcontents.

"Oh! that was very fine talk in your last letter about peasant proprietorship, independence and self-respect," replies some one of your readers, "but you must admit that the difficulties and hardships encountered by the Canadian farmers are terrible, and more than counterbalance any advantages which they may enjoy in other respects." Now, Mr. Editor, permit me to say that this part of the subject has been grossly misrepresented, and exagerated (undesignedly, I believe) in some letters that recently appeared in the Belfast papers. Postponing for the present the question of climate, which will come under discussion in due time and contemplating the entire subject in its broadest light, I cannot but express my conviction that the trials experienced by the majority of Irish farmers are even greater than those undergone by their brethren in Canada. Let us for a moment place the two side by side with each other and then we shall discover on which side the advantage lies. What is the history of the average farmer at home? It may be told briefly as follows: A large purchase money for the bare tenant-right (in many cases no small portion of the price must be borrowed at high interest) a heavy annual rent, from 30s to 50s for good land, which like a crushing burden oppresses him for the remainder of his life—high taxes, frequent wet harvests, stubbing out old hedges, and enlarging and draining fields, preparing farmyard and purchasing artificial manures—wading land—breaking lumps—paying high prices for fuel meat, &c., not to mention the paying interests on money that may have been borrowed to assist in putting him into the farm—running to the bank for bills to pay the rent—selling off crops at low rates to meet urgent demands and many other difficulties that will suggest themselves to the minds of your readers. And then, should he be so fortunate as not to fall into arrears escape eviction, he leaves his children to fight like cats and dogs over the "property," when the office promptly steps in and summarily puts an end to the squabble by packing them all off to
