OUR CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

A great and nobie work is urgently calling for the belp of all who dread misery and delight in charity. We well know that this is a trying season, that there is great pecuniary depression existing, that serious anxieties and fears are disturbing the commercial world, that the scarcity of money is the cry of every one we meet. It may appear then to some persons an unseasonable time to be asked to contribute towards charitable objects or institutions. It would be better, some may say to wait until these hard times have passed over, before making collections in behalf of the poor, the helpless, the orphan, and the outcast. To those who are familiar with the importance and necessity of charitable institutions to the welfare of society with the benefits they confer, with the miseries they ward off, it is unnecesed by Christian precepts. We must systematically give something for the relief of the poor, otherwise their miseries will so increase in our midst as to be unbearable; we must help to maintain the charitable institutions in our midst, for if they go down, in consequence of our indifference we hazard divine visitations, the effect of which may be to make us an unprosperous community, an un' fortunate people. There are at the present time in this city numerous charitable institutions, such as the Convent of the Good Shepherds, the St. Patrick's Orphan Asylum, ber. St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum, the Protestant Orphan Asylum and Hospital, the Catholic Hospital, and an asylum for old people, called St. Charles Hospital. The objects of the Catholic and Protestant Hospitals are very similar and well lieve that, both in the country and the good, and is now being cut. Barley of disposed would escape the malady. Now that portion of the reply to the address of The tender care of the Orphans is a duty to which both our natural and religious feelings prompt us. Yet we regret to find that frequent appeals from the Clergy and Directors in behalf of these asylums are necessary owing to apathy and forgetfulness, Of all the charitable institutions referred to, that of the "Good Shepherds" seems to be one least understood and least exci our sympathy and concern, though the objects it has in view are no less important and charitable than those of the others. Its objects, however, are different in some respects from those of the others, though there are points in which they are similar. The institution called "The Good Shepherds" differs from the Hospitals, as it is principally for the reclaimng of the fallen; it is for women or girls who have been led astray; it is both a made considerable headopens its doors as a harbour of refuge or opens.
