OTFAWA, FRIDAY, AUG. 20, 1875. MR, LANGEVIN AMONGST HIS

OLD FRIENDS.

Even the Programmist Party do not seem to sympathise with Mr. Langevin, for one of their organs hailing from Three Rivers, a locality that not long ago was sufficiently devoted to-that gentleman and that sympathized with all those special interests and ideas that he was understood to represent, has given him what a contemporary describes as the "severest handling he has yet received." If the honourable gentleman is not popular with the Programmists where can his popular has become a dead no party, or wing of a party, can consent to be burthened with him, or held responsible for his advocacy. His repudiation by any authority speaking for the Programmists seems to us the one thing needful to show that politically speaking he is friendless, an Ishmaelite, his hand against every man and every man's hand against his. It would appear to have supplied the one link necessary to make complete the chain of his unpopularity. It may be regarded as the closing act, in that direction, of that fate that has pursued him with unfaltering constancy since he entered public life. To say of Mr. Langevin that he never was a popular man is to put his weakness in that sense in a very mild form of deseription. The fact would be more justly dealt with by the statement that there probably never was a more thoroughly unpopular man in public life in this

There certainly never was a greater failure as a party leader. Sir George Cartier set him a good example; he conduct ed his party in a solid phalanx for many years from triumph to triumph, and, when removed from this life, that party stood as Mr. Langevin became the successor of a man to whom his supporters were devoted. But, apart from the consequences of the Pacific scan. dal, the falling away, the disaffection, and the insubordination that almost immediately set in were the subject of general observation and comment. If the Pacific scandal had not come, if we may so pu it, to the rescue, and thus afforded to Mr. Langevin and his immediate friends an excuse for failure that overwhelmed all men, would be more striking to-day than it is. But that unfitness is perfectly well known, and to such an extent that the terial honorable gentleman will hardly ever again lead the strongest wing of the

to which he may happen to belong. We observe that the Three Rivers paper in question, the Journal, agrees with our view that the charge from which Mr. Langevin wishes to escape, is a far less serious he would be getting his present prices; one than that which he prefers to acknow. saving fifty per cent in wages-and he go away?" lege.
