The account of the French Army, which is the first article in the August number of Blackwood's Magazine, is said to be written by Frederic Marshall, author of the articles on "Internationa anities," which appeared in this maga zine during the past year. In the present instance, the information-the material for which was collected with much diffi ulty-is of a character that must be very nsatisfactory to the French people, and that will make other nations feel, that while military affairs remain in their present state, nothing is to be feared from

"Nan: a cummer Scene," is just the kind of story to suit this hot weather being light, easy to read, and sufficiently nteresting to attract the attention without requiring any mental exertion.

"Rivers" is a suggestion for holiday rambles, or rather excursions, the idea being taken from "Our Autumn Holiday ! trip made by four young men who went up the Seine and down the Loire" in an outrigged rowing boat." The writer thinks that a similar excursion on the Thames would be found quite as pleasant, and less langerous, mentioning two works recently published, which corroborate his opinion. He also notices two books of beautiful etchings, on of the Loire, the
