OTTAWA, THURSDAY, SEPT. 16, 1875

The Hon. A. B. Foster returned to town yesterday afternoon by the Canada Central.

Mr. T. P. French, Post Office Inspector, returned to town yesterday from his recent visit to Ireland.

Hon. D. A. Smith, M. P., and daughter arrived at the Russell House yesterday from a recent trip to England. They were passengers by the Polynesian.

The Principal of the Normal School has secured Gowan's New Opera House, for the formal opening on the 22nd inst. The Lieutenant-Governor will preside.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario has appointed Mr. William Archibald, of Edinburgh, a solicitor before the Supreme Courts of Scotland, to be a Commissioner for taking affidavits for use in and for the Courts of Ontario.

The buildings for the Provincial Exhibition are now nearly finished. The Crystal Palace is a handsome structure, octagonal in shape, and fitted with all the requisites for the advantageous display of goods. The stables are well finished, and the machine sheds are commodious, many of them being already occupied with their contents. By the end of the week a considerable number of articles will be on hand. It is a pity that all the buildings erected by private parties do not better conform to the Exhibition buildings proper.

THE TEMPERANCE COLONY.

Mr. Alexander Begg, a gentleman well known in this city, and who has been for some time past one of the emigration agents for the Dominion in Scotland, passed through Ottawa the other day en route to what is known as the "Temperance Colony." This colony is now being organized in the Township of McMurrich, Parry Sound District, about 150 miles north of Toronto. It is near the line of the proposed "Ontario Pacific Junction Railway" which will connect the Northern Railway, from Toronto, with the Georgian Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway by intersecting that line at about seventeen miles south of Lake Nipissing. Mr. Begg is the founder of the colony, and has built a first class saw mill, and proposes to build also a flour and oat meal mill. The land is given by free grant to the settlers on the terms usual under that system together with the further stipulation that they agree to "discountenance the use and prohibit the sale of intoxicating drink within the Township." In this excellent undertaking Mr. Begg is supported by the Grand Division of the Sons of Temperance, the Grand Worthy Patriarch of that body, Mr. J. M. T. Hannum, having quite recently issued a circular setting forth the basis of organization, the objects in view, the mode of operations, and all other necessary details of information. The scheme is a novel and most interesting one and its promoters are worthy of the sympathy and encouragement of the public.

"FACTS" AND FACTS.

Mr. William Macdougall finds congenial employment in abusing and vilifying all and sundry who do not happen for the moment to be his particular and bosom friends. Mr. M. C. Cameron has some personal remembrances of the free use Mr. Macdougall can make of the name and character of a man to whom he is opposed in politics. To be sure, Mr. Macdougall has had a similar experience at Mr. Cameron's hands, and a good deal of it. But for pure invention, Mr. Cameron has no chance with his co-leader and rival. He wants the brilliant imagination, which conjures up his enemy doing just the very thing he ought not to do. It is very convenient, to say the least of it, to be able to set your antagonist hors de combat in this way, and the "Wanderer" is fruitful of expedients that are convenient. The Kingston Whig has lately devoted some attention to the hon. gentleman, to very good purpose, and in a late issue our contemporary remarked:—"Some of these days Mr. Macdougall's unruly member may get him into exceedingly hot water, for there is a limit to human patience with such abusive mendicants, who curse all who refuse to give them charity. Mr. Macdougall, the beggar at the door of the public crib, is the last man in Canada that should by coarse abuse invite exposure of his history as a public beggar, and if he has any little sense left he will not again provoke an exposure." Mr. Macdougall has of late been afflicted with the "writing itch"—has in fact been rubbing himself against every post and pillar, and of course he replied to the strictures of the Whig "at great length," as the Montreal Gazette says. In order to give himself the vantage ground which he thought necessary to his own complete vindication, he had first to start the theory that the Premier of the Dominion "hated" him, and then he set about finding out for his own satisfaction the cause of this hatred. The Premier hates him, he says, because he once did the former a favour. The favour, according to Mr. Macdougall's statement, was his insisting that Mr. Mackenzie, the present Indian agent at Sarnia, who had held that position previous to the formation of the Coalition Government of 1864, and was removed then "without sufficient cause" (the phrase is Mr. Macdougall's own), should be re-instated. If it was a favour to the Premier that a simple act of justice should have been done for one who happened to be a relation, what a world of favoured people this must be. Justice must have lost its old time significance entirely. Mr. Macdougall's claims on his own behalf do not appear to be always of a kind which could with justice be acceded to, and the fact that he is at present a "beggar at the public crib" for a considerable amount will scarcely be accepted by the public as a convincing reason why it should be paid. Besides, he may rest assured if Mr. Mackenzie or the Government over which he presides, did not happen to regard his "little bill" with the same favour as he does himself, they are prepared to give good reasons for their judgment and to stand by the consequences.

The Montreal Gazette, after quoting a small portion of what it has described as "a long letter," expresses the opinion that "the Clear Grit newspapers will "hereafter be rather careful about attacking one who is so well armed as Mr. "Macdougall appears to be." Our contemporary need not be alarmed on account of the Clear Grit newspapers; they have seen and heard of Mr. Macdougall before, and perhaps they understand perfectly well what they are doing when they attack the "facts" with which he has armed himself. Here is one of the "facts" which Mr. Macdougall brings into the fray in the meantime. He says:—"So "much of the history of these times seems "necessary to rebuke the satellites of a "Minister who made it a boast in Scot-"land that even he, the herd boy of the "neighbouring hills, might have been an "adviser of the Crown in Canada years "before, if he had—done what? sold "himself to his political opponents!" It would be interesting to know where and when Mr. Mackenzie made his boast in Scotland. Mr. Macdougall will probably be able to tell. We have seen reports of all the speeches delivered by the Premier in Scotland, and read them with all the care and pride which Canadians had good reason to feel on their account; but we have yet to see and hear of the sentence in which Mr. Mackenzie made any reference to the subject of an offer being made to him by any one of a seat in any Government. If this be a specimen of Mr. Macdougall's facts—and we fearlessly assert that it is—the Clear Grit newspapers have little need to be afraid.

On the evening of the other day on which the battle of Sheriffmuir was fought and "Johnny Cope" was so signally and disgracefully defeated at Preston, a number of prisoners taken in the action were, for the lack of better accommodation, huddled into a barn of a neighbouring farm-yard, over whom was placed a small guard of well armed Highlanders. Some of the English red coats, notwithstanding that their position was everything but comfortable, could not resist retailing jokes to each other in no very measured undertones, far from flattering to the soldierly appearance of the northern conquerors. This sport was anything but relished by such of the guard as had caught so much of the English tongue as to understand what was going on at their expense. One mountaineer, of the clan M'Donald, brandishing his sword and assuming a countenance expressive of contempt, reddened with rage, and making a pause at the barn door, whence some unha lowed words had just saluted his ear, addressed the group in the following terms:—"Ye coht to be respeckin' yer betters—tem tat pe in real sojare—ye dirty cowards! Tare tho pe ane ansang ye a' tat was pe killed tis plesait mornin'—put was stickit whaur its no pe decent till say." Taking then a short turn to cool his rage, he resumed his station at the door, and taking a side view of the prisoners, exclaimed—"Whis pe mak ta King put ta sojar—an' wha can pe mak ta true sojar put ta Macdonnell?" A general burst of laughter instantly issued from the barn at the interrogator's clanish ideas, when a voice from the crowd called out—"And who made the Macdonell?" With an air of contemptuous indignation he replied—"Ta Macdonnell made herself—Ye tam Shordy's coarts!"

"All Reformers here, waiter, I suppose?" said an old Tory, paying his bill at an inn during the Reform agitation. "Oh, yes, sir, all Reformers here; master and mistress, and all, sir." "And you, John; are you a Reformer?" "Yes, sir. I am very staunch for the Reform, sir." "Very well, then, John; there's the bill, the whole bill, and nothing but the bill;" and so saying the gentleman laid down the money, without giving John anything for himself.

A great sensation was caused the other Sabbath in a church not a hundred miles from Dunvegan by the minister, who, while addressing the audience from the text, "Eridh mi agus theid mi gamh-'athair," ("I will arise and go to my father"), in his usual characteristic, vivacious, and graphic style, stopped short all of a sudden, and without giving out a psalm and asking a blessing descended from the pulpit, muttering, "Two o'clock, two o'clock; time for dinner, time for dinner."

Mr. Cameron, a returned missionary from India, has been called to Spencerville, in this Presbytery, and will doubtless soon enter upon the duties of his sacred office.

CAPTURING A WILD MOOSE.

From the Almonte Gazette.

During the month of February last, three Indians and a white man, named Reeves, stationed at a trading post near the mouth of Crow River, which empties into the Coulonge, cleverly effected the capture of a young moose eight months old. The trading post just mentioned belongs to Mr. J. R. McLaren of Carleton Place, and it being that gentleman's desire to obtain possession of a moose, he gave orders to his men to capture one, if possible, on the first opportunity. Four years ago this command was given by Mr. McLaren, but in all that time no opportunity for answering the order offered itself until last February, when one was perceived and instantly given chase. For several weeks, with the most indomitable fortitude, the four hunters continued the pursuit on snow shoes, the men seemingly as untirable as the agile and undersized fugitive they were endeavoring to run down. At length, when success appeared to be but a mere myth in perspective, and the utter fruitlessness of the chase had taken firm possession of the minds of the hunters, they were rewarded for their energetic perseverance, and their eyes gladdened by the welcome sight of the noble moose lying panting on the snow, and utterly unable through fatigue to escape its merciless pursuers. To approach it, thoroughly exhausted as it was, was a hazardous venture not to be thought of, as a stroke from its powerful limbs might be dealt which would leave the victim of it hors de combat. A consultation followed, and it was decided to pen the deer where it lay. Trees were then cut down and a high wall built around the exhausted animal, which eyed the preparations for its capture with fear and trembling, uttering at intervals plaintive cries of distress, but unable to make the slightest attempt for a continuance of its former flight for freedom. When the hunters had built a surrounding wall, over which it was impossible for the moose to leap and escape, they resolved to keep it penned in the enclosure until it would become sufficiently tamed to allow itself to be led by a halter, and taken to the trading post. For over a week the men fed it with browse, which it ate readily, becoming at last, after several days, so accustomed to the sight of the hunters that it took food without the slightest sign of alarm from the hands of its captors. The hunters then concluded that since the animal had become so tractable that keeping it detained in its prison was no longer a matter of necessity, and that it might with perfect safety be conducted to the post, the hunter Reeves, leaped over the enclosure, expecting no resistance, but in this opinion he was at fault, for scarcely had he entered the pen when a terrible fight for supremacy took place between the deer and him. The narrowness of the pen incommoded the moose, fortunately for the hunter, from using its natural means of defence with its habitual freedom, but notwithstanding this clog on its activity it nearly proved the death of Reeves, who although endowed with wonderful powers of athletism found it necessary to bring his greatest agility into play, in order to escape the deadly thrusts of the moose's antlers and its savage kicks. Round and round the pen Reeves and his four-footed companion went, the deer endeavouring to gore and kick its captor to death, and Reeves, unable to escape from the pen, calling loudly for help from his three Indian companions, who, notwithstanding all the bravery attached to the name of the "noble red," stood terror stricken on the outside of the enclosure, and refused to assist their endangered companion. Reeves finally managed to get a rope round the neck of the deer, and threw one end over the wall to the Indians, who grasped it and held the noose fast in one corner, while Reeves escaped, which he happily was enabled to do, although bleeding from every pore and almost stripped of every vestige of clothing. The prison was then broken down, and it was resolved by the four hunters to drag the deer by means of the rope back to the trading post. It was conducted in this manner for about two miles, the deer plunging and kicking and offering such obstinate resistance that this means of procedure was deemed too ineffectual, so they fettered the animal with ropes, threw it on an extemporized sleigh, and Reeves sitting on the sleigh to keep it from rising, the remaining three hunters dragged the load to the trading post with the utmost difficulty. After being brought to the post the moose was put in active training and kept there till last June, by which time it had become quite tractable, and then brought to Eganville, where it is still undergoing a severe training, and is today so thoroughly subdued that a child can drive it. It drives contentedly in a sulky and harness, and is daily increasing his speed so rapidly that it is confidently expected it will be able this winter to make a mile in less than two minutes, and it is supposed that when full grown it will be able to do its mile in about a minute and a half. Unlike a horse it strikes into its fastest gait on the first word of command, and in trotting throws its hind feet two feet in front of its fore ones. When captured it weighed 200 pounds, and now 500 pounds, and stands fifteen hands high. For the last few weeks it has averaged twenty pounds per week, and one twenty-six pounds. When full grown, if it lives, it will weigh 1,400 pounds, and stand nearly, if not nineteen hands high. Mr. McLaren sold the moose last week to two Americans for the sum of $3,000. It is the intention of the purchasers to take the animal to the United States, and there trot him against time and the principal race horses on the continent.

Two Scotch students, desiring to make themselves comfortable, had a stove put in their chamber. One bought the stove and the other paid the mason to have a hole cut in the chimney. They broke up housekeeping the other day, and divided the effects. One had the stove and the other the hole.

It is a remarkable circumstance that a Paisley girl can't ride five miles in a car without becoming so tired that you are obliged to put your arm around her to support her, though on the whole it is a pretty poor man who wouldn't be willing to sacrifice both arms to the comfort of a suffering female.

A Western newspaper having admitted some strong personalities into its columns, announces that it has to cease publication for the following reason:—"Our editor has lately disappeared; according to the latest information, he was last seen under a tree, slightly raised above certain persons, who were pulling at a rope!"

Pollock, the poet, shortly after he had become a licentiate, was preaching at Dr. Jamieson's, Nicholson street Secession Church. A captious hearer was venting his dissatisfaction with the young preacher to one of the elders, when the latter exclaimed, "Oh, man, hae a wee thocht patience wi' the lad, ye'll get it a' frae him in 'The Course o' Time.'"
