ing grounds :-It is well known that during August and September there is generally open water along the whole northern coast of America, from Behring Strait to King William's Island. Captain Collinson, now Admiral, made nearly the whole distance in a sailing vessel in 1852-53, when in search of Franklin, and wintered within 100 miles of that place. The first ships that ment. attempted the passage by this route, although whether by Peel Strait or McClintock Channel, is not known, were the Erebus and Terror, of Sir John Franklin, and they were arrested and beset on the northwest shore of King William's Island, and, as is well known, abandoned after eighteen months' imprisonment in the ice, having drifted in that time only nineteen miles. It is now thought that had Sir John Franklin passed to the east of Franklin, and the charts then showed the other remedy in existence. island to be a peninsula. The only way open to him, as he supposed, was that through Victoria Channel, and it was this route which he probably attempted. In the year 1858 the Fox tried to follow the lost ships by passing through Peel Strait, but only succeeded in penetrating twenty-five miles when she was stopped by the ice and obliged to return out of it. She then attempted a passage by way of purpose of recovering them had any of the party succeeded in reaching home.

This supposition is confirmed by reports brought home by that enterprising and gallant American explorer, Captain Hall, who gathered from conversations with the Esquimaux that a tradition existed of some such deposit. When that great Arctic explorer, Leopold McClintock, made his most ex-haustive search in his extraordinary sledge journey from Bellot Strait down the east coast of King William's Island to the mouth of the great Fish River and Montreal Island, thence round the south the whole Island, the ground was covered with deep snow, and it is possible that many objects were concealed that might when the graund is bare, have been revealed, and on this supposition our proect was founded; but the same obstacle that prevented our making the Northwest Passage also rendered it impossible to obtain any further information regarding the manner in which those brave men died who gave their lives for the noble cause of science and their country's honour, but not without having been the both the hardships and pleasures of an first to discover the Northwest Passage. In closing my letter let me again thank you for the generous and disinterested way in which you have assisted my undertaking, and the liberal spirit you displayed when you thus showed that the cause of science is of no nationality, and that you were as ready to aid an English expedition, as you would, I feel sure, be equally ready to aid one organized and on our way back we decided to make another attempt to obtain news of the British Arctic Expedition, sent out under Captain Nares, by searching the Carey Isles, and if necessary, even to proceed as far as Littleton Island, where also the Polaris passed her second winter.
