THE CARAQUET RIOTS.

Notwithstanding the excitement which the school riots at Caraquet and their tragic results created all over the country at the time of their occurrence, they seem to have passed out of public remembrance almost completely. Not even the fact that the trial of various persons charged with having participated in them has that it should be so. The controversy out of which those difficulties arose, as the public are well aware, was the propaying the school tax - a tax which has unfortunately been the source or much heart-burning and recrimination. However greatly such differences of opinion are of themselves to be regretted-and they are always productive of much evilmake them the pretext for taking the law are of that order, and human blood having been shed, and human life lost in connection with them, justice demands that the authors of the calamity be punished, whoever they were. There appeared to be a the Province, of all conviction would, under the circumstances, have been almost an impossibility. There were undoubtedly good reasons for fearing this result, that is to say if any jury which could possibly be chosen, with the shadow of fairness in its composition, were to permit pre-conceived prejudices to weigh with them in the verdict which they should render. Experience goes to: show, however-and this case will add very greatly to the force of the precedents -that British juries seldom permit their religious opinions to interfere with the Rowe bas, and it shows, at any rate, that oath they take to "truly try and he can string figures together; but it their sovereign and the prisoners at the Caraquet. Justice has been avenged, and victims of the riot lost their lives were peculiar and not of a kind to show per sonal malice or previous intention to commit a murder, there is every probability that the recommendation with which the jury accompanied their decision will not have been made in vain. Whatever the merits of the case of the minority in New Brunswick on the School Question, proceedings like those which disgraced Caraquet on the occasion referred to, and which resulted so fatally, could only weaken and disgrace it. We feel assured that those who are most enthusiastic in the cause of separate schools in the sister Province, will be the first to rejoice that a crime of any kind, but especially a crime committed under such circum-

The meeting which took place in the Rink Music Hall last night no doubt expressed very correctly, in the various as lar as I can see, the Agricultural Society feeling of the general public in regard to it would be so pleasant to feel that you the matter, but there were many who were not present in the Hall who nevertheless sincerely sympathized with the wants to row in this boat? I wonder if sentiments of those who were-many. indeed, whose regrets are no less hearty, not take the shape of own way, the city will go into debt $20,000 eulogistic speeches or condolent resolutions. When the horror with which the news seemed to strike everybody, when at any rate, we ought to know what there first published, has passed away, and there is on the cards, and I beg, therefore, to is time for calm reflection, we are much invite Mr. Alderman Rowe to tell mistaken if the investigation instituted into the affair, either as to the manner in which was conducted, or the verdict renderech will be regarded as at all satisfactory.
