CHURCH AND STATE IN SCOT

The Free Church Presbytery of Edinburgh was recently invited by the Rev. Dr. Begg, the leader of the Anti-Volun- of work to be done at Aylmer the European Continent, likewise observes tary party in the Free Church, to petition is Parliament for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the ecclesiastical condition of Scotland. In speech by which the motion was supported, the rev. doctor submitted that in admitted that the Legislature and Govtake means to undo the evils so causedpublic ecclesiastical revenues. It is a well-known fact that Dr. Begg is in favour, not only of the principle of an endowed State Church as opposed to one supported by the voluntary contributions of its own members, as the Free Church of Scotland is at present, but of an actual union between the Free and Established sections of Presbyterians. To those not Teas, Coffees, Fruits, Spices, Wines, Livers, acquainted with the history of ec clesiastical politics in Scotland the dea would seem a very fair and reasonable one. But there is a strong opposition to endowed State Churches in any form growing up in Scotland, and there can be no doubt that the great majority in the Free Church are entirely in sympathy with the object of the agitation, although such has not so far been formally acknowledged. The Free Church is not necessarily a "voluntary" church. On the contrary, the question of lay patronage alone
