One of the most remarkable family meetings which it has ever been the lot of man to chronicle took place on New lear's Day, at the home of Mr. McLean, farmer, Thurso, when that gentleman's wife and family, consisting of seven sons accompanied by their husbands and wives sat down to eat their first dinner for the year under the "old paternal mansion and the old ancestral trees."

Mr. McLean, as his name sufficiently ndicates, is a Scotchman and emigrated with his wife and nine children, five sons and four daughters, to this country in the year 1829. He settled upon the farm on which he now resides, where o her two sons were born to him. All these childdren are now alive and within day's journey of their father's house. The youngest is 39 years of age, and only one of them remains in a state of single ssedness, while all the others are pappy fathers and mothers. The age Mr. and Mrs. McLean is 89 and 84 respectively, and both are in full possession of all their faculties. Until a short time ago Mr. McLean was able to walk a distance of three miles regularly to church, and is still able to read his Bible and newspaper without the aid of spectacles. His "better half" is at any rate his equal in intelligence and physical ability, and still looks vigorously after her household affairs. Besides this healthy family there are sixty-one grandoldldren, thirty-one are sixty-one grandchildren, thirty-one sons and thirty daughters; with twelve the case to leave the Court, and thus a father, mother and family amount to 736

On the same day on which this truly happy family sat down to dinner, there met and dined 28 cousins, of which, however, no statistics are at our command.
