all cases where the animal vitality is failing, phosphorus is decidedly superior to every other remedy at present known. It will work effects such as nothing else will produce, and it possesses the great advantage of not causing, when its use is relinquished, the slightest reaction or depression The Cornhell Magazine of April, 1861, says:—
"But of all the inormatic elements, none But of all the increase elements, none seem to exhibit so striking an adaptation to become a constituent of the organic body as Phosphorus. Here, then is an element, which can imperceptibly and quickly pass from a condition of great chemical activity to one of great chemical inertness. In virtue of this character Phosphorus may follow the blood in its changes, may exidise in one great set of applifaries, and be indifferent to expen in the other; may occur in the brain in the vitreous form, changing as quickly as the intellect or imagination demands, and literally fisming that thoughts may breathe and words may burn, and may be present in the bones in its amorphous form, content, like an impassive caryatid, to sustain upon its diswedred shoulders the mere dead weight of stones of fisch—and what is here said of the brain, as contrasted with the bones, will apply with equal or similar force to many other organs of the body. All throughout the living system, we may believe that Phosphorus is found at the centres of vital action in the active condition, and at its outlying points in the passive condition.

Dr. Rowbotham says it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that Phosphorus in a free, un-oxidated state is an essential element of acoxidated state is an essential element of activity in the brain and nervous system of animals; it is equally difficult to resist the conviction of the great importance of Phosphorous as an element of the Materia Medica.

"The question naturally presents itself," Why is so valuable an element so little regarded and so seldom prescribed?" The only answer which can be given is:—that a certain difficulty has been found in so preparing it that its action may be kept under perfect control. Hitherto it has been used in almond and olive oils, in Sulphuric Ether, in rectified Alcohol, in Chloroform, and in several other substances; but however valuable it has been found in all the hitherto known methods of its preparation, certain irregular been found in all the hitherto known methods of its preparation, certain irregular results have been experienced, which have led physicians to neglect it for general purposes, and to employ it only in extreme cases. But a chemical process has now been discovered, by which its invaluable action on the human system may be realised without any of those drawbacks which previous modes of administration have invariably produced.
