The Times.

Office: 68 & 70 Rideau Street.
L. R. TAYLOR, Proprietor.

OTTAWA, WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 13, 1876

The Hon. Mr. McIlwraith will to-day address the intelligent and free and independent electors of Brantford.

MELLO, the Montreal abandoned jeweller, now finds himself in a tight fix. Yesterday he was arrested in St. Louis on two charges, first for smuggling goods into the States, and second for larceny, at the instance of one of his creditors. The United States will make an example of him, and the officials there appropriate the remainder of his ill-gotten wealth.

We give the evidence and proceeding in the Dwyer-Sheehan case in rather extended form, as no doubt, much general interest is taken in the issue. From the proceedings, there is no difficulty in seeing what the decision of the Committee will be. But as more evidence is to be brought forward on Saturday by the assailant we will not anticipate the verdict of the Committee.

The Conservative picnic in Belleville yesterday was the most brilliant demonstration of the campaign. Some fifteen thousand people assembled took the horses from the carriage in which he was proceeding through the town, and themselves put on the harness; and the young ladies, not to be behind hand, showed upon him their smiles and presented him with bouquets of flowers. Indeed, here, as elsewhere, the enthusiasm manifested shows that he lives in the hearts of the people. The proceedings were of the most harmonious nature throughout, and it is said that no such demonstration has been seen in the district since the visit of the Prince of Wales.

MORE FIGHTING IN SERVIA.

A despatch from Belgrade, from official sources, announces that fighting took place between the Turks and Servians on Sunday and Monday. The fight was precipitated by an attempt of the Turks to bridge the Morava, their object being to cross over to make an attack upon Delijska, a stronghold near Aleksinac, on the road to Belgrade. The Turks were, it is alleged, defeated in their attempt after very severe fighting, and both armies retained their positions at the close of the day. On the next day Gen. Tschernyayev having been joined by the force of Gen. Heskyntzky, a combined attack was made upon the Turkish rear with favourable results. This account, it must be remembered, comes from a Servian source, and as such accounts have frequently been contrary to facts, it must be accepted with a grain or two of salt. The attack upon the Servian position in front of Aleksinac, when the Turks gave their opponents so severe a handling, was represented by military authorities as a bold, startling and hazardous operation, but it was successful, and that is the best warranty that it was, under the circumstances, a proper movement. If the Servian account of the late encounter be truthful, it would seem that the Turks made another bold and hazardous movement in their efforts to sustain their position in the district.

The pic-nic question was next taken up, and to decide whether to abandon the meeting, or to postpone it. A long discussion took place as to the propriety of sending Sub-Inspector Kirby for convictions that were not original, as the members did not think it right to pay for cases that originated in the Police Court.

After considerable other routine business the meeting adjourned.

THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

A correspondent of the World, New York, who accompanied the vice-regal party to British Columbia, appears to have surrendered like a good Republican to the bewitching grace of His Excellency. Writing to his journal from Victoria on the 23rd ult., he gives some account of the Governor General's movement in the Province in the face of a strong feeling of dissatisfaction which evidently still prevails, and is constrained to draw a comparison between His Excellency's demeanour and that of high dignitaries in the United States. The correspondent has, no doubt, the representatives of most American journals of influence and position, great experience in addressing public men, and, as a consequence, is no ordinary judge or authority of the deportment of the governing powers. The correspondent thinks that Lord Dufferin's conduct is characterized by a "cavalier grace and self-possession." As one instance of this he quotes the reply (a telegraphic report of which goes in our column) which His Excellency returned to the deputation appointed to lay the grievances of the Province at the foot of the throne. The pith of the grievance was the work on the Pacific railway had not kept faith with the Province, that there was much and strong feeling on the subject, and that if something were not done to pacify the people, the ultimate consequences might be serious. To meet a difficulty of this kind, tact and discretion of a high order was required; but His Excellency was quite equal to the occasion. In his formal written reply, it will be remembered, he told them that it was not in accordance with the usual practice for him to deal with addresses other than those of a personal or complimentary nature, except under advice from his responsible advisers, and suggested that the signatures of the addressee should precede by a memorial or petition to the Croix. His Excellency then supplemented his formal reply by an informal speech of two hours' duration, in which he made a complete review of the whole situation, first from the standpoints of the deputation and their fellow provincials and second, from the standpoint of the Dominion Government or the people of Canada. In this speech he showed himself possessed of a thorough mastery of the whole question, and brought out the whole of the salient points with great moderation and cogency, and manifested a remarkable degree of patient investigation, which, a person familiar with the bounces and shallowness of American public men, was truly surprising and pleasing. Another instance of His Excellency's grace and self-possession was afforded in his reply to the address of the Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly, in which are the following passages: "Being well acquainted with the history of the Church of Scotland, I can understand with what pride its children in Scotland regard their country as a land of freedom and independence. I want to get a note he had made me on; he asked about another note he had sent me; he asked if I could not get it settled, as he didn't want to push it up to the Foreign Office; he will be entertained to a dinner at Watford." The honourable member was very kindly received and frequently cheered by his adherents. Mr. McDonald followed, and after a speech from Mr. H. Merrick, M.P.P., concluded the proceedings, which were of a most harmonious character.

Sir John is being entertained to dinner at Dr. Duff's. How to-night he will remain here till to-morrow evening. Previous to his departure he will be entertained to a dinner. An illumination is taking place to night, and at the hour of sending the despatch the streets are well lit with a large but orderly concourse of people. The police have been called out since the visit of the Prince of Wales, but nothing has been done to prevent the crowd from filling the streets.

A despatch from Constantinople says that Marshal Manuseff, who went on a mission to Warsaw to persuade Russia to release the warlike aspirations of her people, has not yet been officially communicated.

Russia will not permit Servia to accept Turkey's terms. The question now is, when will Russia draw off the army and openly prosecute war that she really wants, while pretending to be neutral?
