Tinkling glass at Crest Hardware

Last week was a bad one for the windows at the Crest Hardware Store on Main Street. Front windows were broken at the store on Wednesday and Thursday. David Dorion, 18, of 2 Ann Street in Penetanguishene, was charged with mischief to private property valued at greater than $50. after one of the windows was broken on Wednesday.

Following the breaking of the second window at the store on Thursday David Dorion was once again charged with mischief to private property valued at greater than $50. Broken windows were broken shortly after midnight.

The unknown tire slasher . . .

Someone or some group is running around with sharp knives in town. On Wednesday night police learned eight vehicles parked on the north end of Maria Street had tires slashed between 8:30 and 10:40 p.m.

On the following night two tires on a big brewery truck were slashed during the night when the truck was parked in the Main Street brewery parking lot.

. . . strikes again

Two more cars and another brewery truck were the latest victims in a series of slashed and punctured tires which has hit Penetanguishene. These incidents happened over the weekend.

In each case the tires were punctured.

Penetanguishene area court news

Three men pleaded guilty to impaired driving charges in provincial court in Penetanguishene last Thursday.

Bruce Middleton, 18, of Midland pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving. The court was told that police came upon Middleton's car in the ditch in a Tiny Township sideroad in March. Middleton pleaded guilty to the charge of impaired driving which was laid after the mishap. He was fined $150.

A 32-year-old Midland man also pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving. A car driven by Ross Quinlan collided with a parked automobile on the west side of Castle Drive late in March. Total damage as a result of the accident was estimated at $800. Quinlan was charged with impaired driving following the accident. After pleading guilty to the charge he was fined $100.

A 29-year-old Midland man, Rosaire Blondin was fined $230 after pleading guilty to a charge of impaired driving on March 15.

Unlawful sale of Liquor

The president of the Wanderers Snowmobile Club was fined $100. after taking full responsibility for the club going astray of the province's liquor laws.

As a result of keeping close watch on the Tay Township club, officers from the area detachment of the Ontario Provincial Police successfully raided the club on March 31.

Inside they found 13 persons and plenty of beer and liquor being sold in the unlicensed club.

Judge Len Montgomery passed a light sentence on club president Robert Hudson Thayer after the court was told that profits from the sale of liquor were used to promote the Santa Claus parade in Port McNicoll. Thayer had no previous record. He was fined $100. The case was heard in provincial court in Penetanguishene last Thursday.

Driving while disqualified

A 23-year-old Penetanguishene man pleaded guilty to a charge of driving a motor vehicle while disqualified on November 12, 1974. Joseph Godfrey Stewart was fined $150. The case was heard in Provincial Court in Penetanguishene last Thursday.

Failed to remain

A 23-year-old Midland man was fined $100. and had his licence suspended for three months after pleading guilty to failing to remain at the scene of an accident on March 27.

The case was heard in provincial court in Penetanguishene last Thursday. The court was told that Robert Deschamps only left the car to walk along Highway 27 to his brothers' house, where he intended to contact the police. The car had struck a mail box and a parked vehicle on Highway 27 outside of Penetanguishene. Damage to the vehicle was estimated at $1,100.

Deschamps had no previous record.

Tips on caring for your horse

by Babs Ellis

At this time of year horses have been getting a minimum of exercise and therefore require careful handling in order to condition them.

A "soft" horse fatigues more rapidly than one that has been conditioned because his muscles are softer and carry an excess of fat. By working such a horse moderately, with properly spaced periods of rest, it is possible to build up the muscle cells to a point where the horse will do as much work as the seasoned animal. Rest provides strained muscles with an opportunity of repairing themselves. Inasmuch as fatigue increases with the square of the work done, and not in direct proportion, sustained muscle effort can produce disastrous results.

If harmful fatigue is to be avoided, a horse starting a day's work, either in harness or the saddle, must be warmed up gradually. He should be worked at a moderate speed, in order to keep a balance between muscular activity and ability of the blood to provide fuel and remove waste material. He must never be called upon for his best effort until thoroughly conditioned, and then only after he is properly warmed up. It is equally important that he be cooled out gradually at the conclusion of each performance.

It is difficult to overwork a saddle horse that has been thoroughly conditioned, provided he is being adequately fed and watered, and is properly ridden. That is that the horse will not be allowed to trot over nine miles an hour, that he will not be called upon to perform on hard ground or pavement, except for short stretches, that he will not be trotted downhill, and that he will not be required to carry a rider is obviously too heavy. If these precautions are observed, the rider will probably tire before the horse.

Exercise should be started and finished at the walk, in fact, horses should be allowed to walk the first half-mile and the last mile. They should not be required to trot on pavement or downhill, as this tends to increase the concussion on the feet and front legs. Girths should be examined at the end of the first mile and adjusted, if necessary.

A saddle horse requires about two hours exercise per day, while approximately three hours work is necessary to keep a hunter or polo pony in condition.

There is a saying that "a horse should be groomed from the inside out". In other words, the coat should be kept in good condition by proper feeding and management. The skin of a healthy horse is loose, supple and easily moved about, the coat is smooth and glossy, but in winter may become coarse and heavy. Horses shed their coats in the spring and fall, the forelock, mane and tail are not shed. The more work a horse does, the more he sweats, hence the greater the need for grooming. In view of the fact that a horse has well-developed sweat glands, grooming should be thoroughly done for cleanliness and appearance, to prevent skin diseases and remove scurf, loose hairs and waste products such as skin secretions.

To judge the cleanliness of a horse, the hand may be passed the reverse way of the hair with the finger tips pressed against the set of the coat. If lines of gray are left on the skin, or if gray scurf clings to the points of the fingers, grooming has not been done efficiently. Quite frequently, the areas between the lower jaw, inside the ears, the fends of the knees and hocks, under the belly and between the forelegs and thighs, are neglected. Before going into the show-ring, the nostrils should be cleaned out and all bedding removed from the soles of the feet. Horses have well-developed sweat glands and will sweat from a number of causes.

Operation face lift may blast off

With the coming of Spring it looks like the long awaited renovations to the store fronts of Penetanguishene merchants will come about. Operation facelift may blast off the ground.

Last night two spokesmen for Penetanguishene's Main Street merchants met at the Panorama Inn with representatives of Canadian Pittsburg Industries to work out the final details of the program.

Chamber of Commerce President, Peter Shirriff, who has pushed for the program from the start said that he's hopeful the renovations will be advanced as much as possible for Old Home Week celebrations

(June 28 - July 5).

Ted Light and Wally Meisinger are representing the interests of Penetanguishene's Main Street merchants. The purpose of Tuesday night's meeting was to co-ordinate a plan which can be presented to individual Main Street merchants. The plans for renovating store fronts are meant to be flexible to allow each merchant to spend the amount of money he or she can afford to improve their individual store fronts and still maintain an overall colour co-ordinated store front scheme.

Shirriff emphasized, "We're not trying to sell the program we're just trying to get it going. It's already been sold."
