Starting April 1st, the public weather forecasts will be given in degrees Celsius, with no mention of the Fahrenheit reading. The public must now realize that 20 to 25 degrees C represents summer comfort, 0 degrees C is freezing, and -20 degrees C is cold. Our temperature readings on the left say you should be comfortable, whether in degrees F or in degrees C.

The inventor of the mercury-in-glass thermometer was Gabriel Fahrenheit, a German instrument maker, the year 1714. His scale provided 180 degrees between the freezing and boiling points of water.

Being a European, he had decided that the point at which sea-water froze should be zero, the coldest temperature to be experienced in his environment. This choice resulted in freezing being at 32 degrees F and boiling at 212 degrees F. We have lived with these funny numbers ever since.

In 1742, the Swedish astronomer Anders Celsius proposed that the scale between freezing and boiling be 100 degrees and thus was born the centigrade scale. (centi means divided by 100). There was some confusion in use of the name centigrade, since it was also used in angular measure, and in 1948 the General Conference on weights and measures decided that the temperature scale would be called Celsius. The Canadian practice will be to write the temperature as degrees C without a period following the C and to refer to temperature not as "above" zero, but as "plus" and "minus".

In deciding to go directly into Celsius, the Metric Commission studied the conversion experience of other countries. In some countries where both scales were reported for a period of years, confusion still exists while in others, where Fahrenheit was dropped suddenly, the public adapted within a period of weeks.

At CKMP radio, we hope to make the change swift to benefit our audience and the public in this area.

Good Luck, and Happy Celsius!
