Trying to defend MVP status

Mighty Kevin Timmons comes to bat soon

by Tom Shields

In just a few weeks, the local baseball scene will be swinging back into action in the South Simcoe baseball league. Kevin Timmons will be trying to defend his status as the "Most Valuable Player" in the league, not only as a good power hitter which Kevin demonstrated last season but also as one of the league's premier catchers handling the decker duties.

But this season could be a farce as far as knowledgeable people in the game of baseball are concerned. Last season, the South Simcoe league instituted the "designated hitter rule" which meant that if you had a player who was good in the field, but not too good when he came to bat, the team could put in another hitter for this person. In most cases last year, the designated hitter went to bat for the pitcher. This is exactly what happens in the American League in the majors.

Explaining the Baseball Farce

But this season, the South Simcoe league has said "lets have a whole barrel-full of designated hitters and they agreed. So here is what we might see late in May when the Indians play ball at King Street Stadium in Midland.

First of all, the managers of each team take their lineups to the home plate umpire for his use during a game. Last year a total of 18 names, nine for each side would be handed to the man in blue. This season, each team could hand the "ump" a bigger piece of paper with 18 names on it, meaning a total of 36 names being handed to the head umpire.

This will probably cause our first delay of the game.

Headaches for the Game Scorer...

Secondly, the league scorer at the game will have his headaches, as a scoresheet usually has room for about 12 names. Now with a team using 18, not counting substitutes for injuries, the official scorer will have an excruciating headache comparable to force seven on the "G" scale. That will lead to a second delay as someone straightens him out.

...and Everyone Else

Next come the fans, who are there to see the ball game and maybe even recognize the left-fielder as the kid down the street, or the guy who works down at the corner store. But now instead of nine players for each team, there is a possibility of 18 players from each team. Altogether 36 players could partake in the game. So now here is a list of the people who will be confused. The Umpire, the official scorer, the public address announcer, the fans, the bat boy, the managers of each team, the trainers, the T.V. crew, the ballplayers, the workers at the concession booth, the fellows in the Goodyear Blimp, Tony Kubek, Curt Gowdy, and even Kate Smith, if she's there to sing the national anthem. I am confused and also concerned about the future status of the South Simcoe league. About the only good point is that you can get more younger players into the game so that they just don't sit on the bench and get mad.

This season, the Midland Indians will be playing most of their home games on Sunday nights starting at 7 Tuesday nights at 7:30 as an alternate night.

In Penetanguishene provincial court

Victoria Harbour man sentenced 14 days

A 26-year-old Victoria Harbour man received a 14 day jail sentence to be served intermittently on weekends following acceptance of his guilty plea in provincial court in Penetanguishene last Thursday.

Paul Larmand was charged with impaired driving on March 8. Because he had a previous record for impaired driving the judge was required to impose a jail term of 14 days. However, in order to enable Larmand to continue to work at his place of employment, Ogilvie Flour Mills, the judge allowed Larmand to serve the sentence on weekends.

Larmand's lawyer admitted that there was no question his client has had considerable difficulty in the past with alcohol and motor vehicles but he added that Larmand was attempting to overcome the problem and had joined alcoholics anonymous.

In addition to the 14 day jail sentence Larmand was placed on a six month probationary period.

Fined for refusing to take a breathalyzer test

A 33-year-old Warton man was fined $125 for refusing to take a breathalyzer test despite his claim that the breathalyzer test, which he was asked to take on January 23, was unfair.

A second charge of impaired driving was dropped because the judge ruled that Paul W. Nielsoen had not performed bodily tests which he agreed to take on the night he was charged for impaired driving.

Nielsoen was charged with impaired driving on January 23 after police stopped him for making a sharp turn onto Concession 5 from Highway 12. When he went to question Nielsoen about the incident, the investigating Ontario Provincial Police officer discovered a case of beer in the back seat of the car. Nielsoen admitted ownership of the beer. The officer stated that Nielsoen staggered slightly after getting out of the car and that in his opinion Nielsoen was impaired.

The defense lawyer zeroed in on a comment Nielsoen overheard the arresting officer make to the second police officer in the OPP cruiser as justification for his client's refusal to take the breathalyzer test. The arresting officer had asked, "What do you think?" of his fellow officer before deciding to lay the impaired charge. The defense lawyer argued that this indicated the officer doubted that Nielsoen was impaired and therefore he had a right to refuse to take the breathalyzer test. The judge ruled that a police officer is not required to believe 100 per cent that a person he is charging is impaired, but only has to have reasonable and probable grounds to make the charge.
