

She rocks and rolls-but she's home

The Gleneagles has been a fixture in Midland Bay for the past month, as it has undergone repairs while waiting for a cargo.

Built in 1925 in the Midland Ship Yards, the ship is the oldest member of the Canada Steam Ship Lines, and is home for 33 men and women.

"She rocks, she rolls, she's my home, she's my soul, she's my ship", is a sailor's saying that pretty well sums up the crew's feelings about their life aboard the Gleneagles.

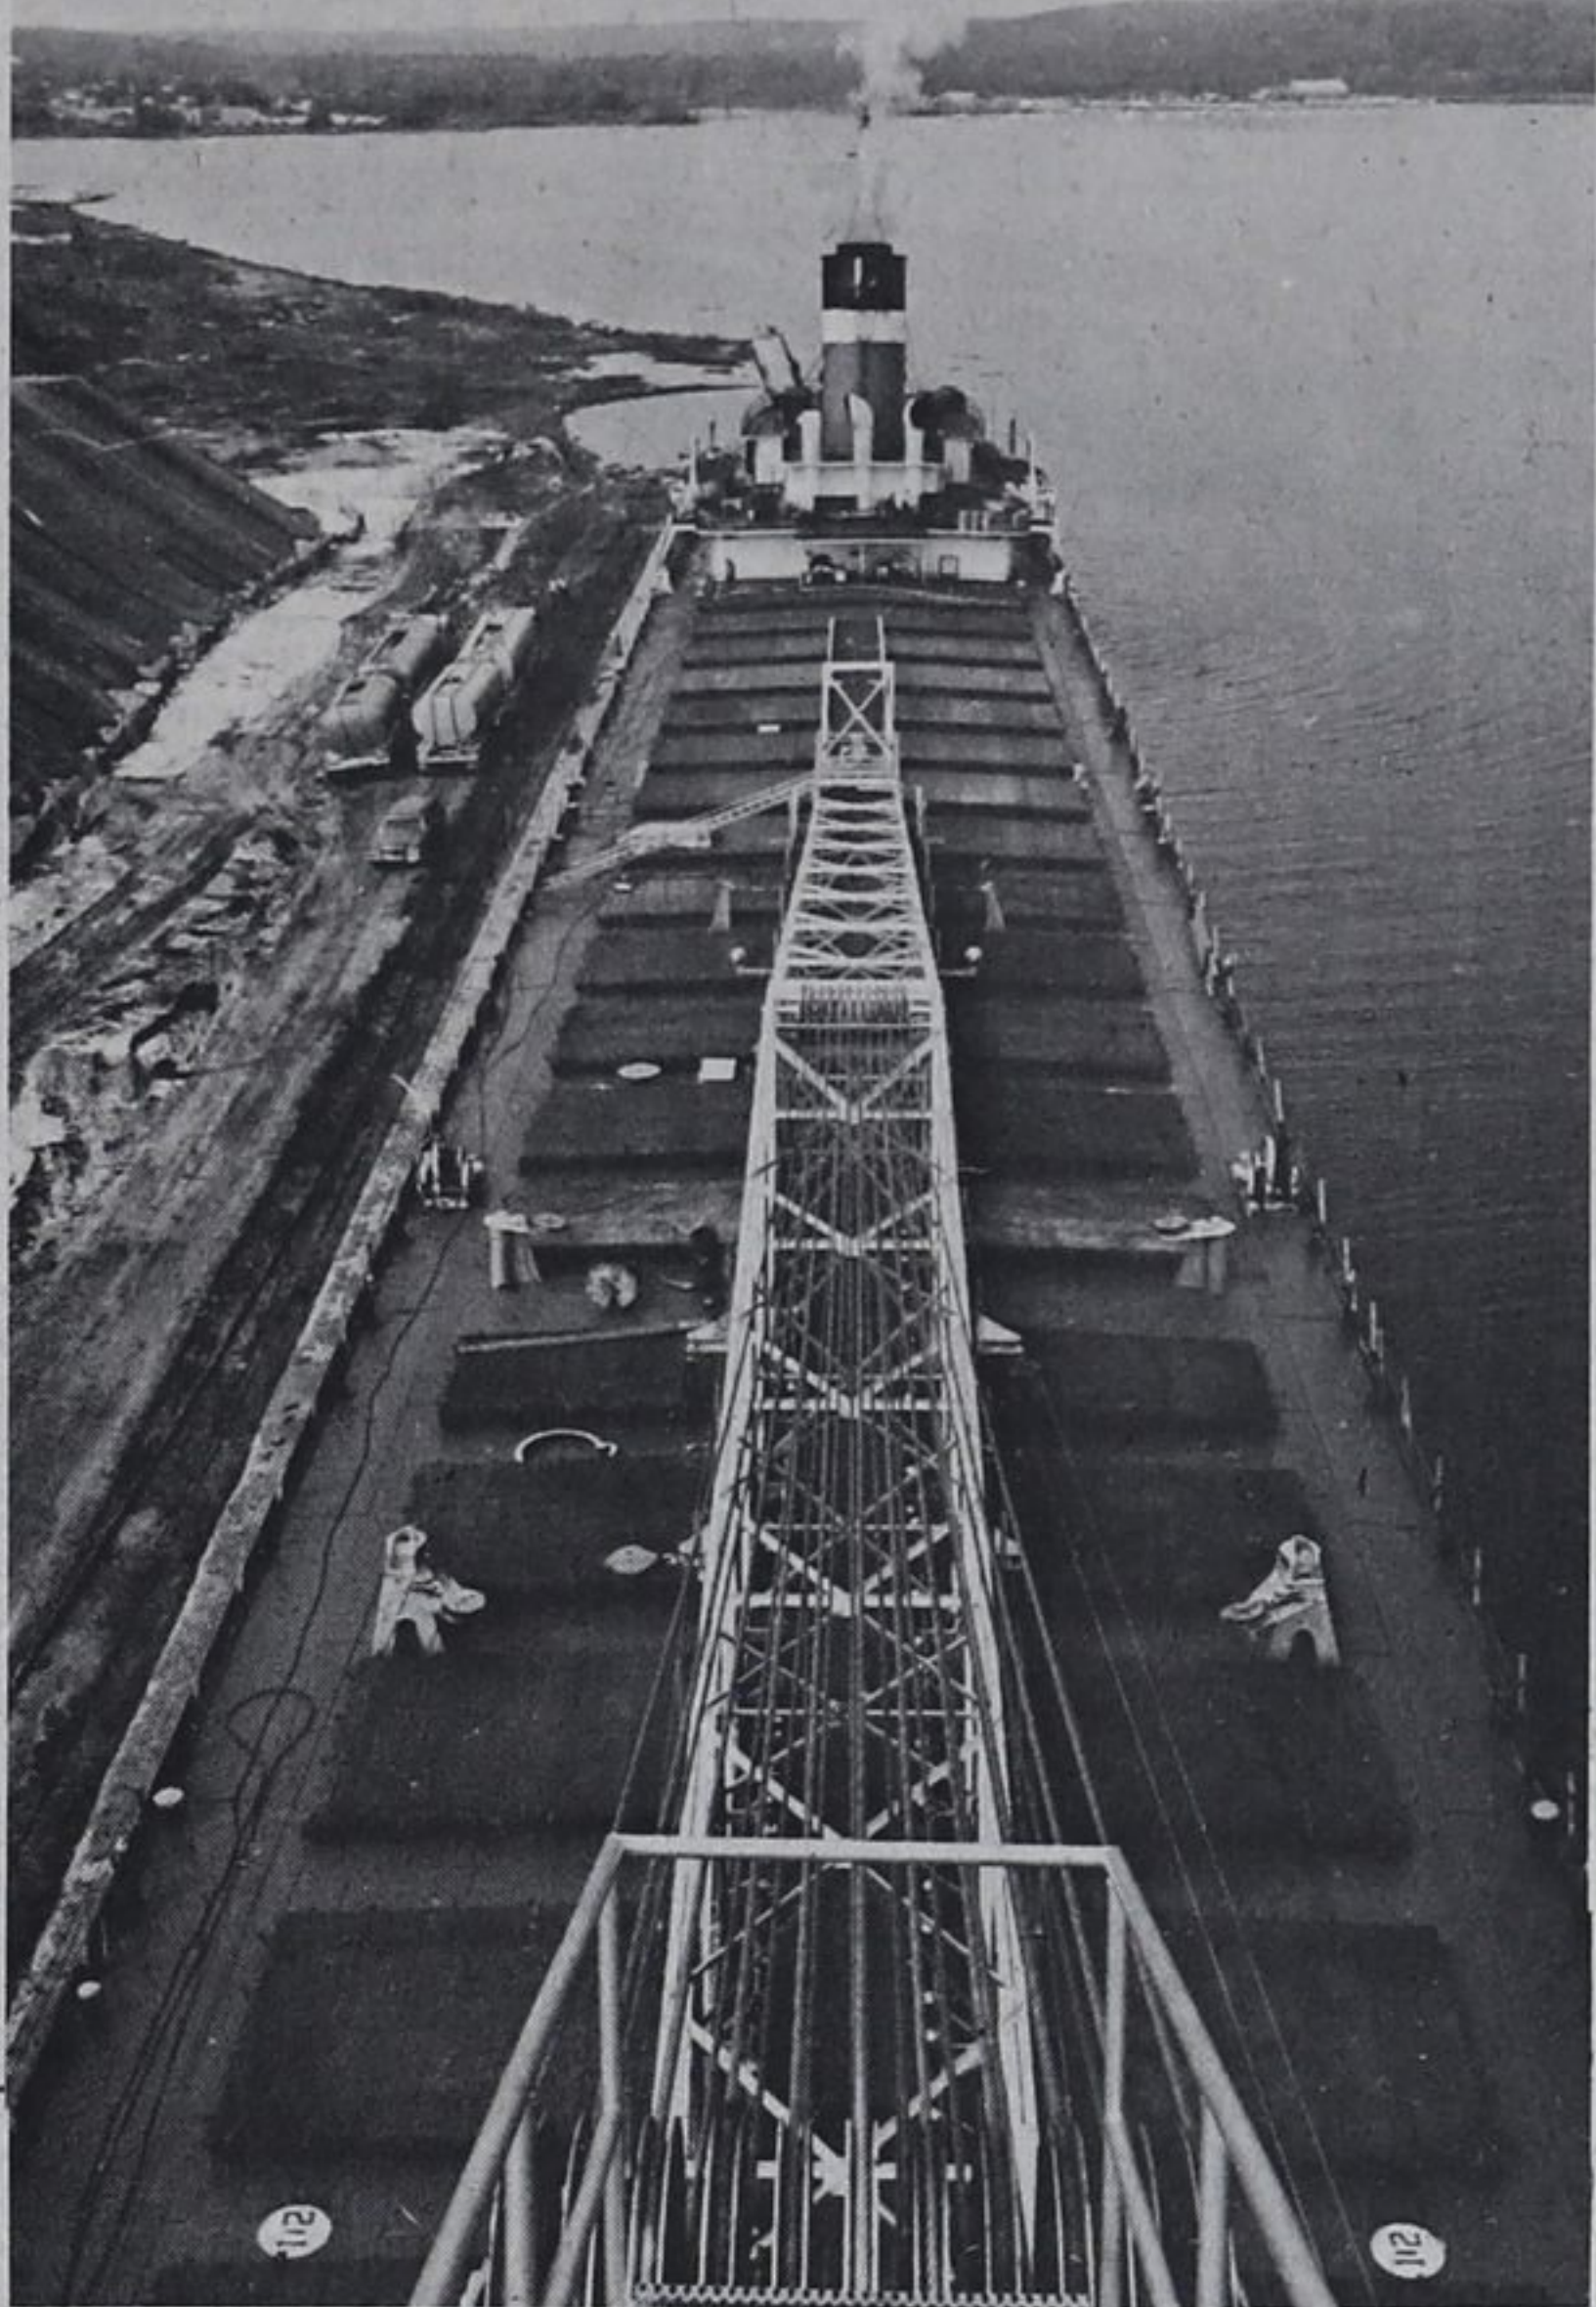

For fireman Wayne Ostermaier and mechanical assistant Bill Jenkins the constant rocking of the ship is a minor irritant compared to their working conditions. They work in the engine room where temperatures hover around 120 degrees F.

"You just have to learn to live with it" says Bill.

The "dumtruck", as she is affectionately known, is popular among sailors of the Great Lakes.

"Everyone wants on this boat," says Captain Charles Robinson who is relieving Lou McKeown of Midland. "She's slow, makes short runs and has proven her reliability". That fact that she's also too old to sail treacherous Lake Superior, is bound to make her popular with her crew.

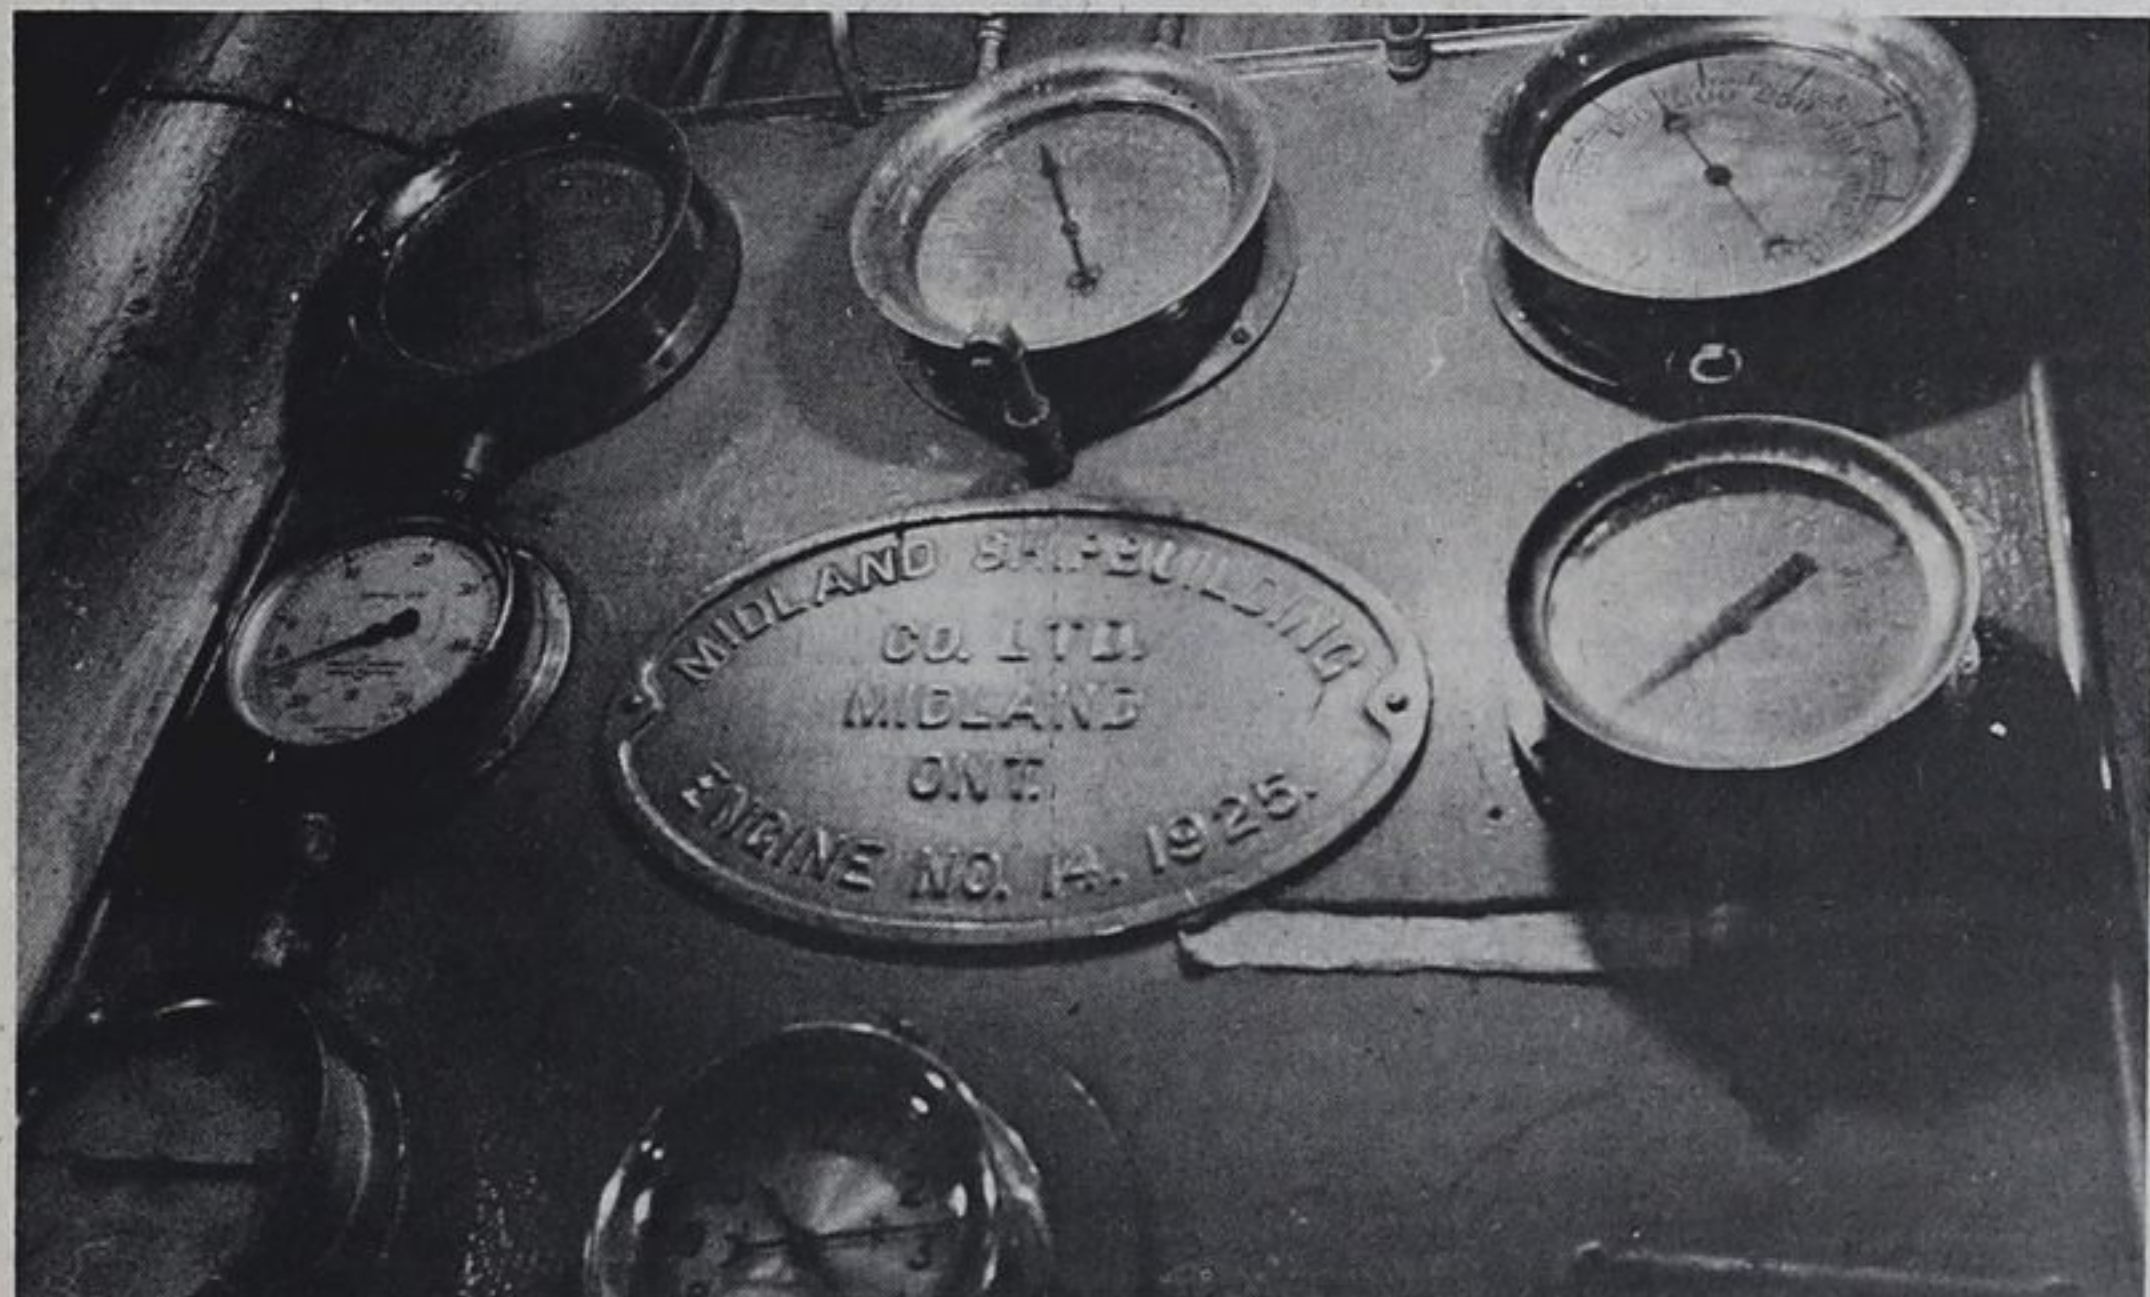

The crew was recalled from leave last week as repairs were completed and a cargo assigned. Six fuel trucks were called from Toronto to supply the 200 long tons of bunker oil needed for the voyage—Parry Sound to Buffalo with a load of iron ore.

That's one big ship
