Public health nurses still without contract

Public health nurses from 28 of the province's 35 public health units are still without a contract or signs of an imminent settlement after 1½ years of negotiations and waiting.

Representatives of the nurses had hoped the Industrial Inquiry Commissioner's report on the status of their negotiations in the province would be released by June 11, the date they converged on Toronto to discuss details of the promised report.

But Bette Stephenson, Minister of Labour, decided to hold onto the report a bit longer, a move that prompted a telegram urging Ms. Stephenson to release the report as quickly as possible.

"This report has been in your hands since May 30, 1977," the telegram reads. "In March 1976 you indicated to us that you would expedite matters between the ONA (Ontario Nurses Association) and the employers within 2 months. "Your colleague, Premier W. Davis, on May 26, 1977 stated that the dispute between P.H.N.'s and the local boards of health would be settled by June 30, 1977."

Salary parity
Public health nurses in 28 health boards in Ontario have been pressing for salary parity with hospital nurses since their last contract ran out in December 1975.

A retroactive settlement is one of the nurses' priorities as their salaries have been frozen at the 1975 levels and no compensation has thus far been made for increases in the cost of living.

Public health nurses, including those in Simcoe County's Local 37, are also pressing for compulsory arbitration to prevent future strike or lock-out situations. A number of health boards have steadfastly refused to accept the inclusion of arbitration in the nurses' contracts.

Ross Stephens, Chairman of the Simcoe County District Health Unit has gone on record as saying compulsory arbitration would take decision-making powers out of the hands of local health units.

The Industrial Inquiry Commission appointed to look into the public health nurses' dispute is only the second such inquiry established by the labour relations board and was charged specifically with looking into negotiations. Its recommendations however will likely be accepted by health units and public health nurses across the province.

Un disque à Lafontaine

Les élèves de l'école Sainte-Croix de Lafontaine ont vu, tout dernièrement, un de leurs projets se réaliser. En ce 31 mai 1977, ils ont enregistré leurs chants sur un microsillon. Parmi eux, nous remarquons quelques-unes de belles voix du village. Il s'agit de Julie Marchand, Yves Marchand et Julien Ladouceur qui ont chanté des solos. Ce grand bonheur, ils le doivent à Mme. Rosita M. DesRoches et M. Romeo Marchand, directeurs de chant. Sur la photo nous reconnaissons, de gauche à droite: Rosita M. DesRoches, Yves Marchand, Julie Marchand, Romeo Marchand, Julien Ladouceur (absent).
