

Recreation facility would include more than rink

Most committee members are inclined however to believe that an arena would be the first priority in the next two or three years. Optimistic committee members however are also looking to the day when tennis courts, a curling rink, gymnasium, swimming complex and even race track and fairgrounds could be part of the recreation facility.

Mrs. Sibthorpe emphasizes that the recreation forum is not, at this point in time, asking the individual municipalities for a commitment to build even an arena, much less the complex itself.

"We only want to tell everyone what we are doing and if they are interested to give everyone the opportunity to participate in a preliminary study," she said. Any municipality will be able to drop out of the picture at the end of the needs study.

"The concept is one of looking to the future needs of the people of the Tiny-Tay peninsula area," explains David Walker, Tay representative on the recreation forum.

"How far this thing goes is anyone's guess at this time. We could be looking for a large parcel of land to develop the complex one, or the study could suggest that we develop different facilities on two or three locations," Walker continued.

Consultants will be called in to present their preliminary proposals and cost estimates, after which members of the recreation committee will decide who will proceed with the feasibility study.

The launching of this new recreation venture has meant an end to Victoria Harbour and Port McNicoll's plans to build a joint arena this fall. Ralph Gray, Victoria Harbour representative on the committee and a Harbour councillor admitted on Monday that "it was doubtful that the two municipalities could have afforded to go it alone."

Tay Township had been a member of the original joint arena committee but withdrew because it felt there had not been sufficient study on the arena proposal.

The new recreation forum consisting of the four North Simcoe municipalities was formed in early July at the invitation of Tiny Township. Since then the members have met twice.

"There's a very encouraging feeling there," enthused Mrs. Sibthorpe. "Everyone is really enthusiastic, we're working together very well."

Members of the committee are investigating the possibility of a provincial grant to assist in paying for the study. A Community Recreation Centres' grant could meet 25 per cent of the costs, while a Wintario grant could offset up to one third of the costs.

This possibility will be further investigated by the consultants preparing the recreation complex feasibility report.

It was just an oversight

Ross Hastings, in the foreground, casts a perturbed look over the Wyevale Secondary Plan at a public meeting held in that hamlet last Wednesday. Hastings' truck cartage business was designated residential in the plan, but Tiny Township planner Roger Robitaille quickly assured him that it was a mere oversight. Listening to the explanation is Gerry Caston.

Wyevale residents approve of secondary plan for hamlet

"Wyevale cares." That's how Roger Robitaille, planning administrator for Tiny Township reacted to the more than 50 Wyevale residents who turned out August 17 to discuss the community's secondary plan.

Tiny's Official Plan states that when the population of a rural service centre reaches approximately 600 persons or before any large scale development occurs, a secondary plan would be prepared.

Interest level among the residents was high but complaints were few. "The residents were pretty well pleased with the plan," Robitaille admitted. "They knew what was happening before we presented this to them - there weren't any major changes."

Representations however were made to extend the amount of area designated for future commercial development. A suggestion that a residentially designated parcel of land squeezed between a commercial and industrial designation be changed to commercial, thus enlarging the amount of future commercial land by another two lots is under consideration.

Arena floor campaign breaks $2,000 mark

The Penetanguishene arena floor fund now stands at $2,216.51, according to fund raising campaign chairman Frances St. Amant.

St. Amant made the announcement at Monday night's meeting of Penetanguishene Town Council. She said the fastball tournament held a week and a half ago raised $1,271.26, while a snack bar operated at McGuire Park has turned a profit of $403.45. So far the teen dances, which have been held at the Legion, have raised $336.80, and private donations have accounted for a further $205.00.

Coming up in the campaign are a car wash to be held all day Saturday at the Dock Lunch on the Penetanguishene town dock, and the car elimination draw, being held at 8:30 Saturday evening at the Curling Club. Tickets for that event are $10.00 each, and will admit one couple to the draw and dance, as well as providing one chance at the car.
