Batik taught at college summer course

Imagine a wall hanging, quilt, dress or window treatment which is unique and startling in colour. Batik is a process which produces these results with textile dyes and wax.

Material is stretched on a frame and wax is applied with brushes or the traditional tjanting tool as developed in Indonesia where the art originated. The batik dye is done in cool water after the wax has darker shades. The characteristic crackle of batik can be controlled by careful handling. The dye penetrates every unwarmed part of the material and is then hung to drip dry. To remove the wax one breaks up the wax into chips and the rest is ironed out between newspapers. For a garment dry cleaning is preferable.

The design is a process of discovery and exploration. It is best to make a sketch of the overall result with a well thought out colour scheme. Using primary colours gives you many shades. Beside colour one should consider size, shape, rhythm, emphasis and balance.

One last suggestion. For the first batik use unbleached cotton. From there you experiment with silk, wool, linen and rayon, viscose.

Now let your imagination create an environment full of works of art using batik with you dressed in real personalized clothing. Batik will be taught by Don Kennedy for Georgian College, Summer School of the Arts.
