Council considers Highway 27 principles

The Highway 27 Steering Committee document, Agreement on Planning Principles was presented to Tiny Township Council at their last regular meeting.

While discussing the Highway 27 study another discussion arose concerning interim development controls along the highway.

Michael Ufford, Planning Co-ordinator of the Tiny Tay Peninsula Planning Board feels that there is a need for interim controls.

A memorandum presented to the council last week states, "as the study progressed there has been a flurry of development activity. It seems safe to assume that many of the applications for building and entrance permits, and much of the real estate activity are intended to avoid the more restrictive controls that may result from the plan".

It goes on to say that the desire to avoid controls is "a natural part of the development process. It could, however, lead to problems for the municipality and its ratepayers."

Mr. Ufford voiced his concern by saying that controls "would come to grips with those problems".

He presented council with three options for interim development controls.

The first option concerns a moratorium on building permits. Within a defined area building permits would not be issued for a specific period of time. There would be exceptions for minor alterations and repairs. This would apply equally to all developers.

This option would require council to pass a by law which would probably result in an OMB hearing. The paper goes on to suggest that "the study would probably be completed and the bylaw revoked before the hearing was held."

If costs were incurred in defending the Moratorium, by the Township it would be expected that these costs would be shared by the four municipalities using the formula that is being used to pay for the study.

That is Tiny would contribute 45 per cent, Midland 35 per cent, Penetanguishene 15 per cent and Tay 5 per cent of costs.

The second option presented dealt with mandatory site plan review.

This means that any application other than for a minor alteration or for repairs would be referred to Council for approval of a site plan. This would come under Section 35A of the Planning Act.

This plan would show building layout, access arrangements and landscape treatment.

This would then be referred to the Highway 27 Steering Committee and consultant who would make recommendations.

No bylaw would be required and the site plan review process is familiar to the Township.

The drawback to this option is that it would be "more subject to interpretation and would involve the time of the Steering Committee and the consultant", the report said.

The third option suggested deals with voluntary consultation with the Steering Committee.

This would mean that the Building Inspector would make a request of all developers of major projects to meet with the Committee and its consultants before a permit is issued.

The developer would be asked to modify plans voluntarily if it were necessary in order to achieve planning objectives.

The paper suggested that the weaknesses of this option would include a reluctance on the part of developers to make changes. It states that by the time a building permit is requested, considerable architectural and engineering work would already have been done.
