A 6-foot hippo, named Henrietta, and a 5-foot-6-inch frog, named Freddie, are helping pre-schoolers learn how to care for each other. "The New Zoo Revue," created by Barbara Atlas, who is first a mother and second a producer, is syndicated to 96 stations, which means about

76 percent of the viewing audience. It has won a dozen impressive awards and played two command performances at the White House. "It doesn't take an educator, but a parent to teach good manners and morals," says Atlas, who also feels parents shy away from disciplining their kids. "My generation said 'I want to give kids what my parents couldn't give me,' so we didn't demand that much from them. Just that they get good grades." Atlas, who is never "short on theory," decided something was wrong in the Haight-Ashbury movement. Everyone seemed high on peace, but short on principles, values and ambition. With no prior television experience, she and Doug Momary created a show that would combine music with anecdotal sketches aimed to support pre-schoolers in becoming more accepting, happy, directed people. Her theories are evident in her family life. Years before "New Zoo," Atlas had studied interior designing but was afraid her work would interfere with raising her daughter. "I wanted to be home with my daughter," she says. "You have to know where your priorities are." Instead she pursued crafts. She designed art/needlework crafts and toys, such as a successful beanbag frog that was released under Playco. When Channel 22 (a Los Angeles station) asked her to design products for a show, she decided to trade her creations for a show of her own. She invented Henrietta, who would give Miss Piggy a run for her mirror. Atlas wanted to enter her in the Miss America contest. She also asked Johnny Carson to give Henrietta equal time when he had Kermit on his show. "We wrote three times and there was no answer."

Critics feel Henrietta isn't a good image for little girls. She is a dilettante, yet Atlas thinks she makes an important statement. "Henrietta doesn't feel guilty for not working," says Atlas. "Whatever you do you should do well and be proud of it." Charlie the Owl feels he's been everywhere. His tree house is a scientific lab and Freddie is "like a normal child learning through experience." The lessons are on drugs, birth, responsibility, caring, sharing, staying in school, moving and nightmares. "We all have dreams. Most parents will tell children about nightmares after they are scared. We tell them what to expect of dreams," says Atlas.

A typical lesson might be: Freddie wants to be an astronaut. He thinks going to space is the greatest joy. But you don't have to go to space to be in space. There are other kinds of space. For instance, the space between you and me. "We have no superheroes or villains. Everyone is learning from each other," says Atlas. "I wanted to teach children the everyday values of caring and living and do it all through music," she says. "We hope children will like themselves much better so they will respond to others better." She attributes better response to a sense of personal worth. "I thought about what was wrong," she continues, "to me it was a lack of simpler things. We needed to create an atmosphere of less stress." For Atlas, less stress means more parental support, and that support comes through discipline. "I'm not afraid to say 'no.' When I go to the supermarket, I say 'no' to junk foods. I wanted to please my parents, and my daughter who is 34 has also wanted to please me." She is also not afraid to test her marriage by being an active producer who believes in her show. "Again, there are priorities. I couldn't stay married if I treated my home exactly as I do work. We share our business problems. My husband no longer travels with me because I hate to see him wait for me. I don't mind waiting for him though." Now that the 1980 tribute to the Year of the Family might bring erstwhile values back into vogue, is Atlas concerned that "New Zoo" will lose its raison d'être? "No," laughs Atlas. "I'd be happy to see these values come back."

TV DIALOGUE

LONG WAIT — It's been two years since I first wrote asking about a guy by the name of Don Shanks. He played on "Grizzly Adams." I have seen him on other shows but know nothing about him. I have tried writing Sunn Pictures but never received an answer. So where can I write him? — Buffy Red Elk, Chandler, Ariz.

ATTACK — Was there ever a movie about a 50-foot woman? If so what was the title and who played it? I think it was on about 18 years ago. — J.A., Longview, Wash.

THE BEST — Could you tell me who plays Luke Spencer on "General Hospital"? I think he's the best actor on TV. — A.Adams, Milford, Mass.

I think he's been getting a lot of mail on Tony Geary a.k.a. Luke Spencer. Both for your information and all his other fans, the address for the set is 1438 North Gower St., Hollywood, CA 90028.

FRENZIED — Could you please dig up some information about Jon Finch? He is a British actor I recently saw in several Shakespeare plays from the BBC. — Laura Alfonso, Tampa, Fla.

The 39-year-old actor got his first big role in Alfred Hitchcock's "Frenzy," in 1972. Before that he appeared in "The Vampire Lovers," "Horror of Frankenstein," "Macbeth" and "Sunday Bloody Sunday." He still works primarily in Britain as evidenced by the Shakespeare imports you saw.

SPACEY — Please settle a bet. My sister's boyfriend and I have a bet about the robot on "Lost in Space." He says its name was Robot, I say it wasn't, but I can't remember what his name was. — Lisa Marchesseault, Naug, Conn.

Doesn't sound like a very safe bet you made there. As it turns out, you lose. Although the robot was a ringer for Robby the Robot of the movie "Forbidden Planet," Will's pal on "Lost in Space" was simply called the Robot.

REBELS — Didn't Lou Gossett once star in a TV series about the Revolutionary War? A friend says I'm just thinking of "Roots," but this was long before "Roots." Please help. — Sarah Jacobs, Providence, R.I.

Gossett played an ex-slave, Isak Poole, in "The Young Rebels," which was a kind of Revolutionary War "Mod Squad" that lasted half a season in 1970.

FATHER & SON — Did Noah Beery and Noah Beery Jr. ever star in a picture together? — Michael Evans, Bloomington, Ind.

Junior made his movie debut at age seven with his father in "The Mark of Zorro," in 1920.
