Artist's landscapes out of this world

On display at this year's show of art sponsored by the Georgian Bay Art Society were the expected: landscapes, sketches, and portraits.

But back in the far left corner of Midland's Centennial Arena were two very large canvases with space ships and moons and a large figure inside a very red armoured suit.

Also in the far left corner were some mildly sexy portraits of women in various stages of undress.

Randall Promm was the name on the bottom corner. The Penetanguishene resident sold three pieces during the show. Two were science fiction. The third was a landscape, in the Van Gogh tradition, he said.

Promm, a graduate of Georgian College's Creative Art course, would like to "give a shot" to making a living out of art. An ideal career would be creating cover paintings for a major paperback line, such as Ballantine Books of New York, in the style of popular illustrators such as Frank Frazetta and Boris Vallejo.

In his sf paintings Promm tries to create the same effect he feels when watching a movie like Star Wars. Ray Bradbury is one of his favourite authors. Omni magazine is a good source as well for stories and inspirational graphics.

Promm has found that painting sf subjects requires attention to perspective, detail, and colouring. A large amount of patience is also needed. After doing a series of sf subjects Promm turns to a more prosaic landscape because he finds painting a landscape a good way to relax.

Monday in the basement of his parents' home he showed a work in progress. The large canvas showed space ships hurtling through a mountain pass guarded by a spider-like machine. A number of the details were only sketched.

Promm doesn't use oil paints. He prefers acrylics and watercolours. Acrylics are faster drying and more brilliant, he says. He uses a palette knife and paints directly from the tube, or slowly builds a scene working with watercolours.

He is considering taking photographs of his current work in progress to obtain, when complete, an effect similar to an animated movie.

Music is a source of inspiration as well as fiction and movies. A favourite of Promm's is "Snowflakes are dancing," an album of electronic music by the Japanese composer Tomita, which Promm describes as a take-off on the work of classical French composer Debussy.

This is the last week of a two-week course in cartooning and watercolour painting that Promm is teaching under the auspices of the Georgian College Summer School of the Arts. It's not hard work. His class of 10 students ranging in age from four to seven years of age take in the techniques he shows them and then "they just take off on their own."

Man in which Moon

Kirstin Morrison takes a close look at Surface Patrol on the Planet Krupp during the show of art Sunday at the Midland arena. The large painting was done with acrylics on canvas and was priced at $175. Kirstin was visiting her aunt and uncle.

Failure to yield causes four accidents

Three minor car accidents occurred Monday and one on Saturday in Midland because one of the drivers in each accident failed to yield.

Monday afternoon Marlene Dickinson 21, of Queen Street, Midland failed to yield at Dominion Street while driving north on Queen. Hit was Marilyn Jackson, 31, of Lindsay Street, Midland who was travelling east on Dominion Street.

Dickinson was charged with failing to yield at a yield sign, and with not possessing a driver's licence.

Damage to the front of Jackson's car was $1,000, to the left front and hood of Dickinson's car $1,200.

At 12:50 p.m. Daniel Desroches, 19, of R.R. 3, Penetang, pulled out of a driveway at 586 King Street into the path of Maynard Leduc, 28, of King Street, Midland.

Damage to both vehicles was estimated to be $1,300. Desroches was charged with failing to yield from a private drive.

Twenty minutes earlier Cathleen Tietz, 42, of Balm Beach Road, Perkinsfield, pulled onto Hugel Avenue from Fourth Street into the path of another car.

car, driven by a Toronto woman, was $900. Damage to Tietz' car was $1,200. Tietz was charged with failing to yield.

Saturday around 5:30 p.m. June Trosty, 42, of Queen Street, stopped in the middle of King Street when she saw a motorcycle approaching her from the south. She was driving east on Dominion Street.

The motorcycle, driven by Harry Ferris, 20, of Burke Street, Penetanguishene, struck her car in the side. Damage to both vehicles was $300. Ferris received minor injuries.

Trosty was charged with failing to yield.
