

Keeping tight lipped regarding TTPPB issue

Officials of the Ministry of Housing in Toronto and officials at the Tiny Township office are keeping fairly tight lipped about Tiny's decision last week to withdraw from the Area Planning Board.

When asked about the decision recently, Guy Maurice, clerk for Tiny said he had no comment, but he did say Tiny representatives to the area board, (excluding Chairman Brasher), had made up their minds to withdraw following the reception they received at a Sept. 4 meeting in Midland.

Maurice added, professional consultants were hired by Tiny to examine the Area Plan and they advised the township of certain possible consequences (which Maurice did not elaborate), should the plan be approved.

Following, there was a meeting with the Ministry which was attended by Tay Township representatives.

Referring to comments made by an Area Planning Board member calling the Tiny reps "Jackasses", Maurice said the precautions Tiny took with regard to hiring professional consultants and their eventual withdrawal indicates they "are not jackasses."

Meanwhile, Marsha Greene, a Ministry of Housing representative who was at the Tiny-Tay meeting said Monday, the Ministry team was at the meeting "purely as observers."

She said the Tiny-Tay people raised certain questions at the meeting pertaining to the legal status of the existing plan and the Ministry advised at one point that existing programs would continue as they exist, even with approval of the plan.

But, "if changes were to be made after the plan was approved, then the area plan would have to be considered."

Yesterday afternoon's mishap

Traffic yesterday afternoon was snarled at Highway 27 and Vinden after a truck was involved in a single vehicle mishap which resulted in its driver being rushed to hospital. Details concerning the roll-over were sketchy at news time since Midland OPP were still probing the accident.
