

Butson hits 48 of 50 in MSS servathon

Midland Secondary School's servathon was a fairly successful event with 60 people taking part.

The servathon was run on a system of 50 serves using a volleyball and when the ball hit a mat on the opposite side of the court, the person scored four points.

Proceeds from the event were to help pay for athletic activities in the school as well as a portion of it going to

Terry Fox's cancer research fund.

Charlene Butson was the top student in the servathon, scoring 192 points out of the possible

200. Close behind her was Bob Houston with 172 points and Charles Fillingham with 164 points.

Circle Square gets start on bus trip six years ago

Viewers in North Simcoe may not know it but six years ago, "Circle Square" was born in a bus between Hamilton and Ottawa. Since then, the Christian children's television program has achieved international recognition and widespread popularity. "Circle Square", now produced at 100 Huntley Street in Toronto, is broadcast right across Canada, in many areas of the United States (now including New York City) and in Bermuda. The original show was the second television series to be initiated and produced by David Mainse, now president of Crossroads Christian Communications Inc., and host of "100 Huntley Street". His first program, "Cross-roads", continues in its nineteenth season under a dramatically rejuvenated format. "Circle Square" was first produced with a staff and cast of children from the Hamilton area, who travelled by bus to Ottawa where production facilities were located. Host and music director was Glen Rutledge, now executive producer of the program, and vice-president of Crossroads Christian Communications Inc., which today produce over a dozen Christian television series, including "Circle Square".

continue to include the innovative, fast-paced elements that have made Circle Square so popular with children. Of course, it features the Circle Square gang, which in this series features several new faces. The cast appears in scenes based at the familiar "Circle Square" living room, as well as in drama shot on location around North America, especially at Circle Square Ranches.

Team
A top Canadian television production team now head the production aspects of the program-Maggie Spalding is producer, and her husband John, who is executive producer of major television sports broadcasts in Canada and the United States, directs "Circle Square".
In the first six years of production, "Circle Square" has produced 104 half-hour programs, in two 52-show series. Beginning in January, 1981, a third 26-program series will be premiered.
The new series will

Library
The puppet characters Egbert and Gert are presiding over the library, as usual, while maintenance man Durk (and friend Polly the parrot) will dispense wise advice to visitors to the school basement.
The program features animated parables, updated Biblical parables with animation clever enough to have attracted international attention. These parables, in fact, are broadcast as separate entities in Sweden and in the United Kingdom, on the B.B.C.

Audience
The six years of Circle Square have seen a growing audience, and marked impact on the show's young viewers. Now, each month, hundreds of children write to the program, many of them seeking help or advice concerning personal problems. Each letter receives a personal response. The children tell their Circle Square friends that the program is their only source of information about God, and the only source of answers to tough questions they face each day.
"Circle Square", born in bus trips from Hamilton to Ottawa, has grown and grown, to the point where now when the Circle Square gang sings the familiar phrase, "Come together, and let your light shine," they are singing an invitation responded to by hundreds of thousands of children.

Picture perfect

It was "lights, camera, action" this week at Ste. Marie among the Hurons where 48 students from Humber College, Toronto, were on hand to take interior and exterior shots of the site as part of their class assignments. Next week it is off to Black Creek Pioneer Village near Metro for more of the same. That's Wendy Love behind the camera.
