There are more beds set aside for arthritis patients in Canada than in all of the United States. This is one reason why The Arthritis Society says that arthritis care in Canada is among the best in the world. Most family doctors are able to successfully diagnose and treat almost all arthritis patients they see.

However, rheumatologists (specialists in arthritis) are available for consultation with family doctors. In 1980, about one hundred and thirteen thousand arthritis sufferers were treated at specialized arthritis centres called Rheumatic Disease Units. These are located at each of Canada's sixteen medical schools.
