Blow torch at official opening

Hon. Bette Stephenson, minister of colleges and universities, will use a blow torch on Oct. 2 to open the new Precision Skills Building at Georgian College in Barrie.

Wearing a hard hat and safety glasses, Dr. Stephenson will cut through a steel chain to mark the opening of a 30,000 square foot skills training building which will be used by Georgian College for Apprenticeship training in a variety of industrial skills.

The opening ceremony will take place at 10 a.m. Representatives of federal, provincial and municipal governments, members of the Barrie and District Industrial Training Committee, the College Board of Governors and representatives of the news media will be among those attending.

The new structure will provide space for machine and welding shops, an industrial design area and masonry instruction. As well, space has been allocated for classrooms, drafting rooms, plant maintenance and a tool room.

The $1.2 million dollars used to construct the building and purchase equipment was provided by the Ministry of Colleges and Universities in recognition of the need for increased skills training in the Georgian Bay Region.

Operation of the building will facilitate training for about 250 students in industrial skills trades including: tool and die maker; mould maker; general machinist, and industrial mechanic (millwright).

One alarm, but no fire on Sunday

Midland firefighters made but one call on the weekend, reports Fire Chief Terry Lethbridge.

On Sunday at 11:23 a.m. firefighters responded to a general alarm to St. Andrew's Centennial Manor.
