

Seminar to explore growth of Ontario towns...

The Country Town in Ontario's Past, a seminar at the University of Guelph on Saturday, Oct. 31, promises to be more than a nostalgia trip.

Museum experts and University faculty will explore the changing relationship between towns and surrounding countryside from the late eighteenth century to the present.

Guelph, Fergus, Elora, Whitby, Oshawa, Barrie and Orillia are some of the towns featured in six panel discussions throughout the day.

A panel discussion, Town and Country Planning in Upper Canada, opens the program. Then Russell Cooper of Black Creek Pioneer Village in Toronto discusses how he and his colleagues planned the reconstruction of a model town of pre-confederation times.

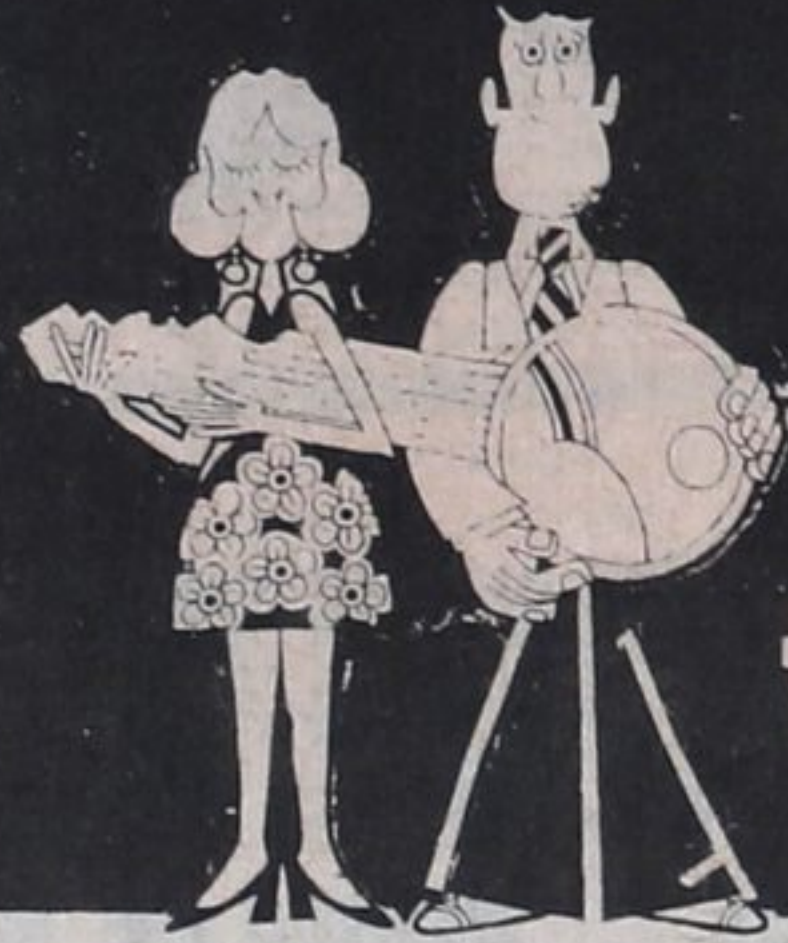

The Inter-relationship of Town and Country in Ontario County stresses their mutual dependence. While country folk went to town for dry goods and other supplies and services, the towns were market centres, dependent upon the produce of the countryside for their economic existence.

After lunch, the discussions move into the confederation period to examine how manufacturing replaced agriculture as the economic mainstay of town life and the resulting rift between town and country. To conclude the day, old timers reminisce about "going to town" in the early decades of this century.

Information and pre-registration forms are available from Continuing Education, 2W1 or call (519) 824- (general) and $16 University of Guelph, 4120, ext. 3956. The (seniors) includes Guelph, Ontario N1G registration fee of $25 lunch.
