Landfill site impact study now in the hands of Tiny

long-awaited report ready

by CAROL DIMOCK

The Hydrogeologic Impact Study on the Pauze Landfill Site in Tiny Twp. is in the hands of Township officials, according to Deputy-reeve John Lackie.

The long-awaited report, prepared by the firm of Morrison-Beatty on behalf of Eric Pauze, dumpsite owner, has a number of inconsistencies which need further study, Lackie said Monday.

Tiny Township has hired Pat Lee, the senior partner of Gartner-Lee groundwater hydrology consultants, to study the report.

"Lee is considered one of the top men in Canada," said Lackie. A designated consulting engineer, Lee has been working with the Federal government on the effect of the Love Canal contamination problem.

"Lee will give us an honest answer," said Lackie. "He has no axes to grind, and is not involved in the politics of the situation." Lee's report is expected within two weeks.

The main area of confusion in the Morrison-Beatty report is the source of the chemical which has been found in three private wells near the site. The wells are contaminated with chlorinated hydrocarbons, namely trichlorethylene.

The Morrison-Beatty report states that the wells have been impacted by sources other than the landfill site,

No royal treatment any more

In past seasons the Penetanguishene Kings were able to push anybody and everybody out of the way as they constructed a virtual dynasty in the Georgian

Bay Junior C Hockey League ranks. But times have changed, and this season the Kings are finding the opposition a lot less amenable to their bullying. And alas, the Kings have hit rock bottom. Last Friday they were given another kick by the Essa 80's. For details, see today's Sports Report.
