Town to stick with student crossing guards

Midland policy makers, upon the recommendation of the town's public safety committee, plan to stick with student crossing guards despite the fact that previous councils have been petitioned to hire paid adult crossing guards.

The matter was debated at Monday night's council meeting again.

Police Chief Ernest Bates called attention to the fact, since Jan. 6, 1961, when the student crossing guard program started in Midland "we have yet to have a child killed or injured at a cross-walk" while a crossing guard has been on duty.

Chief Bates also admitted that he had been intouch with OML (founders of the program) and "they can't recall anyone getting killed. You can't say that for adult crossing guards."

Unlike student crossing guards, according to Bates, adult guards stand in the middle of the road and stop traffic. Once they get there they think they are policemen.

Council was told there are no grants available for adult crossing guards.
