

Quaife named new airport manager

Long-time North Simcoe resident Steve Quaife has been named the new manager of Huronia Airport.

He was picked for the $18,000 a year job from about two dozen applications, an airport commission member told this newspaper yesterday.

In a brief interview, Quaife said he planned to keep the airport open seven days a week and intended to promote the facility so as to attract interest from both the industrial and business community.

"I'm not connected with any flying service. My job will be to see that the airport runs smoothly and that it is promoted properly."

Before taking over as manager, Quaife at one time was a member of the Midland police force and later served as bylaw enforcement officer with Township of Tiny.

Reading tutors complete training program

The workshop conducted by Midland Area Reading Council came to a conclusion Sept. 29 with 19 candidates having successfully completed training as reading tutors.

list of non-readers has for the time being been eliminated, with one tutor still available.

The total number of tutors is now 30 and students under instruction number 32. These figures, of course, are constantly changing as some students complete the course, some leave the area for job opportunities or other reasons and, inevitably, some get discouraged and drop out. Tutors, too drop out for various reasons.

Some join the group to teach one specific person, a member of the family or a friend and, when that person is finished, the tutor does not want to continue. There is, therefore, for one reason or another, a continual attrition of numbers of instructors and so the group is always looking for recruits.

Anyone interested in joining MARC might keep in mind that there is to be a general meeting on Thursday, Nov. 17 at 7:30 p.m. on the second floor of the Midland Public Library and that they would be welcome at that time.

Meanwhile, Lin is still answering the phone at 549-3372 for parties interested, either as student or as tutor.
