The brigantine PATHFINDER will visit Victoria Harbour Aug. 17-19 with her sister ship PLAYFAIR. The tall ships offer sail training programs for youths and adults.

Tall ships coming to Victoria Harbour

If you can't run away to sea, perhaps you'd be content with a visit aboard a graceful tall ship, and a tour of her fascinating facilities.

The brigantines PATHFINDER and PLAYFAIR will be moored beside Queen's Cove Marina in Victoria Harbour this weekend and it will be a perfect opportunity for incurable romantics and camera buffs alike.

On Saturday, Aug. 17, visitors will be welcome for public tours between 2 and 6 p.m., on one of the graceful ships. On Sunday, a brigantine will offer tours between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m., and 2 and 6 p.m.

Both brigs are 72 feet in overall length and are square-rigged with two masts. The PLAYFAIR is easily recognized by her colour. She is one of the few Canadian sailing ships to have been named and blessed by Queen Elizabeth—hence her royal blue hull.

The PATHFINDER is named for a steam yacht owned by Stewart B. Playfair, and carries her namesake's bell aboard.

Both ships were built in Kingston, Ontario—the PLAYFAIR in 1974 and the PATHFINDER in 1964. As sailtraining vessels, they have introduced hundreds of youngsters to the art of seamanship. Adults also take training cruises aboard the ships.

While in Victoria Harbour one of the ships will take a group of local young people aboard for a short cruise, sponsored by the Victoria Harbour Lions' Club.

Vasey maims Elmvale

In the first game of their playoff series, Vasey batters amassed 15 hits enroute to a 13-3 annihilation of the Elmvale Expos.

Vasey struck hard in the first inning with three runs on a walk, a hit batsman, and back to back doubles by Rick Nigro and Jim Beck.

Vasey added one more tally in the second inning, but erupted for six counters in the fourth frame. The inning started off innocently enough as the first two batters grounded out to the infield, Ken Hamilton reached first on an error by the second baseman. After being walked and hit by the pitcher in his first two times at bat, Brent Gordon was bent on revenge, and he got it, as he lashed out a triple scoring Hamilton.

Don Foxall's double scored Gordon and Bob Widdes' single along with a two bagger off the bat of Jim Mills plated two more runs before Rick Nigro drove one over the fence for the final two runs of the frame.

Vasey carried their attack over to the fifth inning as Mike Hill and Blake Edwards reached base on back to back singles. Elmvale then went to work to douse the flames as Hamilton struck out and Gordon flew out to James McNabb in center field.

However, Don Foxall rang out his third consecutive double, followed by a pair of singles by Widdes and Mills before Nigro struck out to end the uprising. When the dust had settled, Vasey had plated three runners and led 13-0.

In the final frame, the Expos converted a single and five Brent McClean bases on balls for three tallies.

Bob Widdes went six innings for the win striking out three while giving up five hits. The big bat for Vasey was held by Don Foxall as he stroked three doubles in four at bats, scoring twice and knocking in three runs. Widdes stroked three singles in four attempts, scored once and recorded one rbi.
